Has Him Winning on First G. O. P. Ballot.

BY ARTHUR SEARS HENNING.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., April 26.—Special.]—That President Hoover will be renominated by acclamation on the first ballot of the 1932 Republican national convention is indicated by the results of a test of party sentiment made by the Washington Post.

It is also indicated that Vice President Charles Curtis will be renominated unless he chooses not to run again.

The Post polled the approximately 1,100 delegates to the Republican national convention of 1928. About one-half of them answered. They were asked to state who, in their opinion, would be the party nominees next year.

Senator Dwight Morrow of New Jersey—13.
Calvin Coolidge—12.

Vote on Vice President.

The division on the vice presidential nomination was:

Vice President Curtis, 244; Gov. Theodore Roosevelt of Porto Rico, 60; Senator Morrow, 34; Secretary of War Patrick Hurley, 13; Representative John Q. Tilson of Connecticut, 10; Hanford MacNider of Iowa, 9; Postmaster General Walter Brown, 6; Senator Borah, 3; Senator Simeon D. Fess of Ohio, 4; Gov. Emmerson of Illinois, 2; Gov. Pinchot of Pennsylvania, 2; Representative Hamilton Fish of New York, 2.

Vice President Curtis is undecided whether to run for Vice President or for his old seat in the senate from Kansas. Mr. Hoover has told him that he would be pleased to have him for his running mate again. A good many Republican politicians think the President was being merely polite. They think Hoover, if he has any political sense, must prefer an eastern vice for a running mate to help take the curse off the dryness of Mr. Hoover and the prospective prohibition plank of the Republican platform.

The Way of "Young Teddy."

"Young Teddy" Roosevelt is the Vice Presidential possibility most widely discussed by Republican leaders in this connection. He is a wet and he hails from New York, a wet state that will be exceedingly doubtful as between a wet Democratic and a dry Republican candidate for president.

When Gov. Emmerson of Illinois vetoed the repealer of the state prohibition enforcement act an Illinois Republican leader asserted the governor had acted at the behest of President Hoover, who, it was intimated, had his eye on Emmerson for running mate. The White House emphatically denied that the President had interposed, and at least one Hoover partisan suggested that Gov. Emmerson might have vetoed the repealer in the hope of earning Mr. Hoover's favor for running mate, but had committed an error of logic. The intimation was that inasmuch as a wet is wanted for second place Gov. Emmerson would have come closer to qualifying had he signed the repealer.

Curtis as a Barometer.

Vice President Curtis has been on the public pay roll about forty years and has no thought of getting off. He likes his present job, with its social and prandial duties, better than any he ever had. But Mr. Curtis is hesitating and says he will not decide whether to run again until he goes back to Kansas to consult the home folks.

Cynical politicians are of the opinion that the hesitation of Mr. Curtis is due to doubt of the outcome of the 1932 election. If he should run for Vice President again and the Democrats should win he would be out of a public job. He could easily be elected senator. His decision is awaited by the politicians as a judgment of party chances in 1932 by one who generally guesses right.

70 Years Church Member, Honored by Congregation

La Porte, Ind., April 26.—[Special.] Martin Cutler, 85, civil war veteran, today was honored by members of the First Baptist church for completing seventy years as a member of the church. He was given a large Bible. The oldest member and a deacon of the church, he is believed to have attained a record equalled by few in America.

WINE AND BEER CLOSE AT HAND, LABOR MEN SAY

Expect Congress to Act Soon.

Philadelphia, Pa., April 26.—(AP)—Organized labor's national committee for the modification of the Volstead act sees the legalization of light wines and beer as a possibility in the next congress.

In a report of a congressional survey released tonight the modification group, which meets in conference here tomorrow, asserted a majority in both houses favored modification.

The report, written by Matthew Woll, vice president of the American Federation of Labor, and I. M. Osborn, president of the cigar makers' international union, stated that only 17 members of the senate and 45 representatives were prohibition "die hards" and that some of them were "listed among the most valued customers of Washington's well known bootleggers."

Corruption Laid to Dry Law.

Asserting that prohibition had "resulted in the transfer of the corner saloon to the home, in the corruption of our youth, apparent corruption of our judiciary and enforcement officers, and creation of bootleggers, gangsters and racketeers," the report added:

"There are few services which can be rendered in these days of depression which will be more helpful to so great a number as prevailing upon congress to modify the Volstead act.

"Our survey indicates that victory is in sight if those who have voluntarily enlisted in this cause will make their wishes known to the senators and congressmen from their states.

"Of the 96 members of the United States senate, 34 are willing to vote for the modification of the Volstead act permitting the lawful manufacture and sale of wholesome beer and light wines.

Await More Demands.

"Fifteen believe that beer is non-intoxicating, but claim that as representatives of their states they are not justified in voting to change the present legislation, as sufficient demands for such changes have not been presented to them from the people of their own states.

"Twelve senators admit that a majority of the people of their state at the present time are producers or consumers of illicit liquors, but claim that the organized church vote is of so much importance that they do not feel it good personal policy to oppose it.

"Ten feel that both the Volstead act and the eighteenth amendment should be repealed and the entire matter left to each state for the people of the state to decide what they want to do. Eight refused to state their views.

144 for Modification.

"Our survey of the house of representatives shows that there are 144 members who are ready to vote to modify the Volstead act so as to permit of the legal manufacture and sale of wholesome beer and light wines; that 54 members believe the Volstead act should be modified permitting the consumption of wholesome beer and light wines only in the homes and each family limited as to the amount that may be purchased each month.

"Thirty-five congressmen admit that the majority of their constituents are producers or consumers of illicit liquors and would be greatly benefited by the modification of the Volstead act. These are fearful that the organized dry influence, while in a minority, is so well organized that its demands cannot be openly flouted.

Point to Home Brewing.

"We found that fifty-five members, mostly from grain and fruit producing areas, are unwilling to vote to modify the laws as their constituents are at the present time manufacturing or producing such liquors as they wish for their own use and the use of their neighbors at but a fraction of what the same liquors cost them prior to the passage of the Volstead act.

"Thirty-four others fear that with the modification of the Volstead act would come racial troubles with the colored element in their districts.

"Sixty-seven members absolutely refuse to indicate how they feel on the question at this time.

"There are only forty-three die hard members opposed to any change in the law.

The report, which will be submitted to the conference tomorrow, said modification of the Volstead act would bring about a big reduction in taxes.

Legs Diamond Wounded by Mystery Shot

Cairo, N. Y., April 27 [Monday].—[Special.]—Jack "Legs" Diamond, notorious gangster, one time bodyguard of the late Arnold Rothstein, gambler, was shot in the head early this morning when he and a companion were surprised while dining in an almost deserted roadside inn near here. He was placed in an automobile and started for an Albany hospital before the seriousness of his injuries had been learned.

Arriving here in his luxurious sedan, the gangster and his companion had been peacefully enjoying their meal when Diamond suddenly rose from the table and walked to the door of the establishment. He was out of sight of the other three guests in the dining room when a sudden rattle of shots was heard.

Diamond was found on the floor of the hall when the startled diners sufficiently recovered their wits to investigate what had occurred, but his assailant had vanished. At 2:30 a. m., two hours after the shooting, no one had been located who had seen the assailant arrive.

State Troopers Investigate.

A farmer named Butler, who chanced by just after the shooting, bundled the injured man, who was uncounscious, into his automobile and sped to the nearest hospital at Albany almost 50 miles away. With him went Diamond's companion, whose name was not learned.

Meanwhile the state police had been notified by telephone and a detachment of the two troopers sped to the lonely inn. They took the three guests into one of the private rooms of the inn and, pending the completion of their inquiry, refused to divulge their names. Diamond was wounded at a New York hotel several months ago.

Diamond was indicted last week on a charge of beating and torturing Grover Parks, a truckman. Parks testified that Diamond and two other men hauled him from a truck near Acra on the night of April 16, and when he failed to account to their satisfaction for a load of cider he was driving, beat him and seared his feet with fire. Diamond was free on $25,000 bail.

Albany, N. Y., April 27 [Monday].—[Special.]—Jack "Legs" Diamond, the New York racketeer, was brought to the Albany general hospital here early today in a critical condition with a shotgun wound in the back by two men, who immediately departed after turning the wounded man over to attendants in the reception room.

The men drove up to the door of the hospital shortly after 1:30 a. m. in a large automobile, lifted Diamond from the rear seat, and carried him into the building. Turning him over to a surprised nurse sitting there, the men said something about "taking care of this man," and then drove away.

SPARTAN MOTHER SAVES 1 CHILD AS ANOTHER IS BORN

A mother, a native of Sparta, yesterday gave birth to a daughter several hours after she had given a pint of her blood to save the life of another daughter in a transfusion operation.

Late Saturday evening the mother, Mrs. Mary Mellas, 2701 Giddings street, called Dr. S. A. Tremulis at his office in the State-Lake building to attend her daughter, Florence, 5 years old. The child was suffering from a septic throat due to scarlet fever. The physician took mother and child to the Contagious Disease hospital in the hope of obtaining a serum. None was available and a blood transfusion from a relative was considered necessary. The mother gave her blood.

She returned home in the physician's automobile and yesterday morning another daughter was born.

GEORGE'S FROZEN ASSETS THAWED OUT BY POLICE

George Morrish, 459 West 79th street, prepared to pay his taxes a few days ago. He drew $700 from a bank. Then he decided he would wait a few days before journeying to the county building. In the meantime he put his money in the old fashioned ice box in his home.

When he returned home after a trip to his restaurant he found that his landlady's employés had put in a new mechanical refrigerator and moved the old cooler to the basement. Search of the box failed to disclose the money, but two policemen who came with axes smashed George's bank and found his frozen assets nestling in a drain pipe.

Find Lawyer's Body in River; Missing Month

The body of Attorney Benjamin McWilliams, who had been missing since March 29 from his home in the Uptown hotel, 4700 Broadway, was taken from the river at the Clark street bridge last night. Apparently he had died by drowning.

Identification was first made by cards and papers found in the pockets of the victim's coat. It was later corroborated by Edward H. Wood, manager of the Uptown hotel.

Last Seen in Café.

McWilliams was last seen alive, so far as the police could learn, in Joe Amato's restaurant at 914 South Halsted street. A specialist in real estate law and a brother of Judge Paul McWilliams of Litchfield, he was apparently cheerful at that time and mentioned that he was going to take a trip to a southern resort.

When search for McWilliams by the police and even by the Secret Six operatives of the association of commerce failed to discover his whereabouts, officials of the Illinois Title and Trust company, 111 West Washington street, by whom the attorney was retained, asked the assistance of Al Capone.

Capone Asked to Aid.

Capone was reported to have promised to do all he could to find the missing man, presumably because of his friendship with a number of Italians and Sicilians whom he met in the course of his work.

Judge McWilliams, who is sitting in the Cook county Superior court temporarily, asserted at his home last night that he knew of no reason why his brother should have disappeared. He was regular in his habits, the judge said, temperate and in good financial circumstances.

The police investigation of the body showed no marks of violence. Death from physical indications, occurred soon after the disappearance of the attorney.

KEEPING AUTO TOO MUCH FOR MISSOURI MAN

Kansas City, Mo., April 26.—(AP)—Harley L. Wilson was dismayed by the parking problem, the price of gasoline and the payments on his car. So he tossed the keys to the car and a bill of sale through an open window in the chief of police's office today. A note was attached which said:

"I can't keep up the payments on this car. Neither have any money left for gas. Besides, it is too much trouble trying to find a place to park in this country. I am leaving here now to hitch-hike westward."

Chief of Police Lewis M. Siegried, himself an automobile owner, and therefore sympathetic, located the car by means of the parking ticket Wilson left with him. Siegried said he would notify the credit company represented as holding the mortgage.

(By a Staff Correspondent.)

South Bend, Ind., April 26.—[Special.]—Mrs. Myrtle Tanner Blackidge, former collector of internal revenue at Chicago, came to South Bend this afternoon, identified the body of George L. Perry as the leader of the band of three men who robbed her of $50,000 in a fraudulent faro game at Springfield, Ill., three months ago and then declared:

FRED LITSINGER.

"I feel now as if I had taken a new lease on life. I feel as if this clears my name of nasty rumors that have been circulated."

The reference was to a statement made after the faro swindle by Edward R. Litsinger, member of the Cook county board of review, who furnished the $50,000 which Mrs. Blackidge lost. Mr. Litsinger declared that he had not been aware of the nature of the transaction when he drew the money from a bank and was sure after he learned of his loss that Mrs. Blackidge "entered into the plan to make this holdup."

Mrs. Perry today turned over to police a key which she believes will open a safety deposit box rented by her husband in a New York bank. The name of the bank was not announced.

She Confers with Officers.

After looking at the body of Perry, who was shot and killed in the rear of the home of his father-in-law, John Canniff, on Friday, Mrs. Blackidge went to police headquarters, where she was in conference for more than an hour with Coroner B. J. Bolka and Police Captain Horace M. Hamilton. To these officials she explained her previous acquaintance with Perry, whom she knew as George Parker, and with Canniff.

Mrs. Blackidge's husband, up to the time of his death, conducted a drug store on the south side of Chicago. Parker, she said, went frequently into this place as a customer some years ago. Canniff also was a steady patron of the Blackidge drug establishment and a card playing crony of the proprietor.

The coroner's questions were directed toward establishing, if possible, whether Canniff was or was not informed of the $50,000 plot. So far he has denied knowing anything about the details, although since the murder he has expressed the opinion that his son-in-law was involved in the plot. He has maintained that he had no love, or even liking, for Perry.

Canniff Is Questioned.

In the police station Canniff was confronted with Mrs. Blackidge and she questioned him, apparently hoping to get him to lead up to an admission that he had tipped off Perry and his supposed companions, Roscoe Reynolds and Roy Browder, alias Burgess, that she was a likely victim for their big money scheme. He was asked if he had ever talked about the affairs of the Blackidge family and disclosed anything that might have been told him by the late Mr. Blackidge in card games. He replied in the negative.

Canniff suggested, however, his belief that Browder, or Burgess, had been in touch with Perry a short time before the latter's death. He added that he did not know Browder; and was unwilling or unable to tell why he suspected there had been conferences between the pair of swindlers. Browder, he said, probably was not the killer.

"Who did it, then?" he was asked.

"Perry in Bad Business."

"Perry has been in bad business for a good many years," said the father-in-law, "it might have been any one

SENATOR LEWIS WILL SPEAK AT CHICAGO JUBILEE

Plans to Appear on May 14 Program.

CHICAGO JUBILEE.

The Chicago Jubilee committee of the Chicago Association of Commerce, No. One La Salle street, telephone Franklin 7700, will supply all information to those planning to participate in the Chicago Jubilee, May 11.

The big outdoor celebration which is to be held at a loop intersection on the night of May 14 as a principal event of the Chicago Jubilee, and in which Mayor Cermak will make his first official public appearance will include United States Senator James Hamilton Lewis as a speaker.

In a message from Washington last night the senator promised he would participate in the affair on May 14. He had been invited to join in the formal inauguration of Mayor Cermak in the council chambers tonight. Senator Lewis declined to attend, however, on the ground he did not wish to intrude his senatorial personality on an occasion which should be solely the mayor's.

Will Speak for People.

"On May 14 I can in all propriety as United States senator, charged with speaking for our federal government, and as a citizen participating in our Jubilee, address the people on your just merits, and speak for the due glory of Chicago," said Senator Lewis' message.

Early last week plans were suggested to defer the formal induction of Mayor Cermak from tonight to the night of May 14 at which latter time the ceremony would be staged on a rostrum at La Salle and Randolph streets. It was decided rather to hold the inauguration tonight, as previously arranged, and at the same time expand the later outdoor event, both elaborating its tone, and eliminating any possible political tinge.

Now as tentatively arranged, Mayor Cermak, cabinet officials and leading citizens will participate in the May 14 affair. Instead of merely accepting an oath, the mayor, it is planned, will deliver his first major official utterance. Other talks will be made, among them that of Senator Lewis. The night may be designated "Mayor Cermak night," "Chicago night," or "city administration night."

Expect Million Visitors.

Meanwhile, progress of the Chicago Jubilee moved rapidly and with important developments. It was predicted last night that 420,000 automobiles will bring 1,000,000 visitors to Chicago during the festival. The estimate was made by Charles M. Hayes, president of the Chicago Motor club.

The estimate is conservative, considering that there is a population of over 50,000,000 with 9,300,000 automobiles within a radius of 500 miles of the Tribune Tower. There are 6,800,000 motor cars and 35,000,000 population within 350 miles by road from the city.

"The Jubilee," Mr. Hayes said, "is being held at the opening of the 1931 touring season. There are thousands of automobile owners wondering where they should go for a drive. Chicago's celebration is offering a timely suggestion.

Routes to City Widened.

"The highways are in a condition that invites visitors. The radial routes within thirty-five miles of Chicago were widened last year, making it easier to enter the city.

"Roads outside the metropolitan area have also been improved. Within the 500 mile circle, there has been approximately $220,000,000 spent in improvement in the last two years.

"Those who haven't driven to Chicago within two or three years will be pleasantly surprised. There are thousands of automobile owners who have remained away from this city, remembering their motoring experience of five or six years ago."

The Chicago Motor club is preparing a pamphlet to distribute among the automobile visitors, detailing the special events of the Chicago Jubilee and giving directions for seeing other worthy attractions in the city, such as the Buckingham fountain, the parks, the conservatories, the museums and the like. The club this week will distribute a quarter of a million stickers advertising the Chicago Jubilee.

The American Automobile association, of which Mr. Hayes is first vice president, is giving national publicity to the Chicago Jubilee.

Daniel H. Burnham, president of the Chicago Regional Planning association and director of works for the 1933 World's Fair, pointed out that from the area within fifty miles of Grant park there will be visitors making daily trips to Chicago during the Jubilee. This fifty mile area has a population of 5,000,000 with 1,000,000 automobiles.

"While the Chicago Jubilee is serving as a forerunner of the World's Fair," he said, "the World's Fair at the same time is serving as one of the attractions for the Jubilee. Visitors will be interested in the fair buildings completed or under construction along the lake front."

STATE FOR JUBILEE

The Illinois Chamber of Commerce, embracing 150 separate units scattered throughout the state, gave its entire and active support yesterday to the Chicago Jubilee.

In officially identifying itself with the celebration, the state chamber of commerce sent requests to each of its member groups to participate. A similar plea, on a national scale, will be made this week by delegates of the Illinois organization attending the 14th annual meeting of the United States Chamber of Commerce, which is to be held at Atlantic City beginning tomorrow and ending Friday.

Broadens Scope of Celebration.

Coöperation of the state chamber of commerce broadens the scope of the festival. According to Col. Robert Isham Randolph, president of the Chicago Association of Commerce, and Frederick J. Ashley, chairman of the coördinating committee in charge of the Chicago Jubilee, it further assures the success of the pageant.

Enrollment of the Illinois Chamber of Commerce in the Jubilee was the latest major development. Another was the announcement by western, southern, and eastern railroads that excursion rates, effective within a 200 mile radius of Chicago, would be established for the celebration. In addition there were scores of others of comparative importance, all coming within the amazingly brief period of one week, or since publication of the original story of the Chicago Jubilee in THE SUNDAY TRIBUNE a week ago yesterday.

More Than Local Event.

The message sent out by the parent chamber of commerce asking support and participation of its 150 members, points out that the Chicago Jubilee is more than a local event, for Chicago and the rest of the state are unbreakably interwoven.

"Plans for the event include a series of unusually interesting displays which cannot help but be of great importance to every town in Illinois," states the Illinois chamber plea to its members. "We earnestly hope that, through your chamber of commerce, you will announce the Jubilee and suggest participation through attendance and in any other way possible.

"The Chicago Jubilee is not to be only a celebration of the accomplishments of Chicago, but of the state of Illinois. Revived business in Chicago is very likely to mean revived business in Illinois cities. The holding of the Jubilee means the coming of thousands of motorists to Chicago who will pass through Illinois cities en route.

"Anything that materially benefits the Chicago market has a lasting impression on downstate industries selling products in Chicago. Any analysis will further provide many reasons why Illinois cities should be interested in the Chicago Jubilee—from a selfish as well as a good will standpoint.

"Coöperation on the part of every Illinois city is another step toward the development of state unity, so necessary to the growth of every corner of the state. We hope you will boost the Chicago Jubilee at every opportunity, and we are pleased to invite you, on behalf of the Chicago Association of Commerce, to attend and participate in this celebration."

Stores Make Their Plans.

With plans for the Jubilee already in workable shape, the committee in charge last night was sorting out applications for participation and receiving new requests. Also, numerous organizations announced tentative plans for their Jubilee activities.

Marshall Field & Co. has arrangements already drawn up which will be enlarged with other plans, now being developed. This store's plans thus far are:

Important series of merchandise displays, and merchandising events throughout the store; appropriate decorations on the outside of the building; one or more floats in the parade; exhibit of World's Fair drawings, models, and photographs.

Will Exhibit Photographs.

A style show with living models illustrating current fashions. A series of entertainment features for Children's day, May 15. Manufacturing exhibits in various sections, with machinery, craftsmen, etc.

Special lighting on State street. Distribution of balloons for children. Confectionery souvenirs in symbolic form. Display of flags of all nations in the rotunda, strolling players and singers about the store, special radio programs appropriate to the occasion, characteristic civic gestures in advertising, and talks by authors with special exhibits of books about Chicago.

U. OF CALIFORNIA TRIES TO LEARN ALL ABOUT TWINS

Berkeley, Cal., April 26.—(AP)—The University of California Institute of Child Welfare is trying to find out all about twins, and today announced 750 pairs had been located in this vicinity. Some phases of the inquiry include:

Does twinning run in families, and if so, does it come through the mother's or father's side?

Do older or younger mothers more often have twins?

Is there a racial difference in the occurrence?

Are twins harder to raise?

Are disciplinary problems more or less difficult?

If one twin becomes a model citizen—or criminal—is his mate apt to follow?

Should twins be dressed the same and treated alike, or does this hinder their individual development?

CATHOLIC WOMEN TO GREET CITY'S JUBILEE GUESTS

Teas and Social Planned for the Visitors.

Definite arrangements to act as hostesses to the women visitors who will come to Chicago for the Chicago Jubilee, starting May 11, have been made by the Illinois Club for Catholic Women. Through its social chairman, Miss Louise Jones, the club has addressed a letter to the Chicago Jubilee committee pledging wholehearted support of the movement and the club's active cooperation.

MRS. F. J. LEWIS.

"At our headquarters, 843 North Michigan," the letter read, "we offer to women visitors the use of our clubrooms, correspondence facilities, and information desk. Afternoon teas, socials, and cards will be offered during the week. Our choral society, which is composed of forty women's voices, will participate in an evening's program if you so desire."

Mrs. Frank J. Lewis is president of the organization, which recently took possession of its new quarters on the boulevard. The club atmosphere is that of a spacious private home, with a permanent staff in attendance.

Election of officers in other large clubs having headquarters near the loop area will be held this week, after which plans will be discussed for their participation in the Jubilee program. Open house for women visitors and programs for their entertainment are being discussed informally.

Leaps in Lake to Die; Pulled Out by Policeman

Steve Metrick, 40 years old, of Whiting, attempted to commit suicide yesterday by jumping into the lake at 51st street. Motorcycle Policeman John Jilek of the south park forces saw his plunge, leaped in after him and dragged him ashore. At the county hospital, where Metrick was taken, it was reported he was suffering from exposure but would be able to leave in a day or two.

HOLD CEREMONY TO INAUGURATE CERMAK TONIGHT

Special Council Meeting to Hear Message.

The formal inauguration of Anton J. Cermak as mayor of Chicago will take place at a special meeting of the city council in the council chamber at the city hall tonight. The ceremony, which will be witnessed by members of Mr. Cermak's family and a large crowd of his friends and political supporters, will open with the invocation at 8 o'clock.

The inaugural message, in which Mayor Cermak is expected to discuss briefly his plans for the civic and business development of Chicago as related to its government, will be broadcast over a national hookup.

Get Report on Committees.

Following the invocation the committee on committees will submit its report on the organization of the new council and aldermen will present matters of ward business. At 9:30 the council will select a chairman pro tem and County Clerk Sweitzer will present the gavel to Mayor Cermak. Former Mayors Edward F. Dunne and Carter Harrison will enter at this time and Mayor Cermak will give his inaugural message. It is planned to conclude the ceremony by 10:45 o'clock.

Earlier plans for Senator James Hamilton Lewis to speak preceding the mayor were canceled last night and Senator Lewis will give his address during the Chicago Jubilee. Whether another speaker will appear in his place for the inaugural has not been determined.

Another matter left undecided last night was the submission of nominations by the mayor for his cabinet. Appointments were being considered yesterday by him along with the task of putting his message in final form.

Broadcast Is Threatened.

It was reported that with the possible exception of naming M. S. Szymczak, clerk of the Superior court, as city controller, no nominations would be made. If the Szymczak appointment is made, an advisory committee of three bankers requested by Szymczak, also will be announced. The mayor said yesterday that no decision as to the announcement of any appointment would be reached until this afternoon.

Plans for the radio broadcast were threatened for a while last night when James C. Petrillo, president of the Chicago Federation of Musicians, warned radio stations that transmission of the program would result in union musicians at the stations being called out. Objection was made because the Senn high school band was to play. Henry Rosenschein, secretary to the mayor, announced that the band would be withdrawn and union musicians employed.

Explains Cermak's Stand.

Rosenschein made the following statement: "Surely no one believes that Mayor Cermak would put anything in the way of the employment of musicians when on the last day of his campaign he hired 500 of them, ten to play in each ward in the city, at an expense of $11,000. The Senn band was selected for the inauguration as being an appropriate recognition of the public schools. Since a controversy has arisen, however, the mayor will pay the members of the musicians' union to play at the inauguration. There are no city funds available for this purpose and the mayor in hiring the musicians is acting simply as a private citizen."

Meanwhile, the council committee on committees continued its deliberations to complete the council organization slate. Ald. James B. Bowler [5th], chairman, said it was unlikely the task would be completed before late today.

The main corridor of the city hall and other rooms will provide for the overflow crowd expected at the ceremony. Amplifiers will carry the proceedings to them.

RULES 1929 TAX MUST BE PAID IN LUMP SUM

Holds Installment Plan Illegal.

Cook county taxpayers will have to pay their taxes in a lump sum. County Treasurer Joseph B. McDonough was informed yesterday by his attorney, Thomas D. Nash, there is no legal way in which the 1929 tax bills can be funded.

The treasurer had asked his attorney for a legal opinion, expressing the wish that a plan be evolved by which the 1929 taxes and special assessments could be paid in installments to lighten the burden placed on taxpayers, facing another tax bill, that of 1930, in seven months. Attorney Nash held that the state constitution and the laws applicable to the levy and collection of taxes will not permit the funding of 1929 taxes.

Holds Treasurer Lacks Power.

"The statutory duty of the county treasurer is to receive and safely keep the revenues and other public monies and funds authorized by law to be paid to him and disburse the same pursuant to law," the attorney's letter reads. "Thus it will seem that the county treasurer has nothing to do with and is not responsible for the fixing of the tax rate or the levying of special assessments.

"That function is performed by other constituted bodies over which the county treasurer has no control, jurisdiction or influence. The county treasurer is merely the depository at which taxes and special assessments, when due, shall be paid.

"When you as county treasurer recommended to the legislature that the time to pay the 1929 taxes without penalty be extended to May 15, which taxes were levied two years before you assumed office, everything that the law will permit you legally to do to relieve the burden of the taxpayers has been done.

Expect Rush Before Deadline.

"In my opinion the payment of the 1929 taxes is unescapable. Any attempt to delay the payment, either by legislation or court action, would be ineffectual, and in the end would make more burdensome the obligation of the taxpayers by shortening the time between the necessity of paying the taxes for 1929, now due, and the taxes of 1930 that will be due in seven months."

Taxpayers have thus far been slow in paying their 1929 bills. The greater portion are expected to pay their bills in the last few days before the penalty deadline of May 15. After that date a penalty of 1 per cent for each month of delay will be added to each bill. Preparations are now being made by the county treasurer for handling the last minute payments.

Crowd Watches Policemen Shoot and Seize Suspect

A crowd of several hundred persons gathered at 41st street and Ellis avenue last night after Policemen John F. O'Connell and Daniel T. O'Neill had fired on and captured George Baker, 47 years old, 3243 Prairie avenue, who fled when they attempted to question him. While the policemen were waiting for a patrol wagon to arrive Baker made another break for freedom. This time two sergeants from a detective bureau squad, Joseph Hanlon and Joseph Conlin, pursued. Baker surrendered after he had been shot in the left arm.

Wealthy Visitor Killed in Front of Hotel.

Two women and three men, occupants of the automobile which killed George W. Johnson, 73 years old, wealthy citizen of Moline, Ill., early yesterday in front of the Edgewater Beach hotel, 5349 Sheridan road, were arrested several hours later by the Lincoln park police. The occupants of the car fled after the accident. All five said they did not know the car had hit any one.

Johnson had just left the hotel, where he and his wife were attending the wedding dinner of their niece, the former Miss Lucille Hanson of Chicago, and E. M. Arndt of Milwaukee, when he was struck by the car. He was hit by one automobile and flung into the path of another, driven by Liston Lange, 35 years old, 156 Fuller lane, Winnetka, son of the president of the Ferguson & Lange Foundry company.

Police Trail Occupants.

The first car speeded on. Witnesses noted its license number. Lange carried Johnson into the hotel, where he was pronounced dead. Sergts. Charles Kiefer and Berney Rosenberg of the Lincoln park police traced the car to W. Kelly, 1700 Jonquil terrace. From him they learned the car had been sold to Miss Pearl Wimmergren, 428 St. James place.

At the Wimmergren home the police arrested Miss Wimmergren, Frank Hall, 34 years old, a barber living at the home; Miss Vivian Shiffer, 28 years old, 7642 Bosworth avenue, a telephone operator; Jack Deming, 505 Deming place, and Carl Ohlekopf, of the same address. Hall was ordered held for the inquest today and the others were charged with disorderly conduct.

Mr. Johnson was president of the Moline Furniture company and was a former member of the state house of representatives. He was born in Andover, Ill., on Oct. 6, 1857. He was sent to the legislature 20 years ago. He was formerly president of the John Ericsson league. His brother, Julius Johnson, is secretary of the Illinois commerce commission.

Two Chicagoans Killed.

Two Chicagoans were fatally injured yesterday when the automobile in which they were riding skidded on the Dunes highway near Benton Harbor, Mich. They were Robert Belzl, 44 years old, a sculptor, and Mrs. Emma Walther, 43 years old, both of 414 Garfield avenue. The deaths occurred in the Mercy hospital at Benton Harbor.

Injuries that may prove fatal were sustained in the same accident by Mrs. Frank Weber, 40 years old, 422 Garfield avenue. Her husband, who was driving the car, was hurt, but not so seriously. The Webers own a farm at South Haven, Mich., and had invited Mrs. Walther and Belzl to go with them for a visit to the place.

On Way to Farm.

Belzl boarded in the home of Mrs. Walther and her husband. He was a veteran of the world war, in which he served as an Austrian soldier. Weber is a chef in a loop hotel.

Joseph Rogers, 60 years old, of Miller, Ind., was killed last night when he was struck on the Dunes highway at Lake street, Gary, by an automobile driven by Joseph G. Price of Rochester, Pa. Price was held for the coroner's inquest.

Charles Greenberg, 15 years old, of 5241 West Madison street, a Boy Scout, was killed last night by an automobile while he was hiking with three other scouts in Addison street between Plainfield and Pontiac avenues. Irving Park police did not hold the driver, John Martz of 3618 North Luna avenue, when he said the accident was unavoidable.

Carl Werly, 76 years old, 4220 Melrose street, was killed last night when he was struck at School street and Central avenue by an automobile driven by Adolph Richter, 1158 Rose street, Des Plaines.

The deaths of the Greenberg boy and Werly increased the Cook county motor toll for the year to 374.

Otto W. Beer, 54 years old, 2308 Cullom avenue, died at Edgewater hospital from internal injuries, believed by the police to have been caused by a hit and run automobile. He was found unconscious in the street at Catalpa street and Ashland avenue by three youths. They said that as they approached the corner a man dressed in evening clothes was bending over Beer and that the man fled in a large sedan which had been parked near-by. The youths gave police a license number, and it is being traced. A set of false teeth, believed to have been lost by the motorist in his flight, was found.

CHARGES PORK BARREL POLITICS PERILS DEFENSE

Gen. Drum Says Training of Troops Is Hampered.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., April 26.—[Special.]—Pork barrel politics applied to the army, accompanied on many occasions by war department reluctance to dispose of its surplus real estate and holdings, has resulted in the continued maintenance by the military establishment of scores of obsolete army posts, forts, stations, and depots which exact annually a toll of millions in appropriations from the treasury.

MAJ. GEN. HUGH DRUM.

Investigation shows that in addition to aiding in giving this country its greatest peace time deficit this year, the continued retention and operation of surplus posts, forts, and depots has brought about such widespread scattering of the enlisted and commissioned strength of the army that today the continental forces are divided among approximately 196 stations, with consequent loss of combat efficiency.

Congressmen Block Their Sale.

The retention of surplus old Indian forts, useless harbor defenses, and old stations is due largely to the opposition to their abandonment by congressmen from the districts where they are located. Changes in war department policy regarding sales of such property also is partly responsible for a situation which finds the army hanging on to hundreds of pieces of real estate no longer needed, much of which on various occasions has been recommended sold as surplus.

Operation of so many stations has greatly increased the army's overhead. Maintenance of supply depots filled with articles that could be disposed of without injury to military efficiency also has served to add to keeping up the size of "the army at the rear," the ordnance, quartermaster and other non-combatant units. Scattering the army over so many stations also has increased the fatigue work each unit must do and decreased the number of men available for the army's mission of developing its combat efficiency and training civilian components of the military establishment. According to figures prepared by Gen. Charles P. Summerall, former chief of staff, less than 54,000 men out of a total enlisted strength of 118,750 are available for training purposes each year after the men needed for the army overhead and for overseas garrisons are subtracted.

Could Save 25 Millions a Year.

Just how much of a dent could be made in the prospective huge treasury deficit for the 1932 fiscal year by the immediate elimination of surplus army real estate, buildings and defenses has been looked into by the war department on several occasions but never made public. Unofficial estimates point toward annual savings of from fifteen to twenty-five millions and possibly more if the abolition of useless stations were accompanied by a reorganization of "the army at the rear," which would include replacement of certain enlisted and commissioned personnel with civilians.

Monetary savings effected through the elimination of army posts and stations now kept on the war department pay roll would also be followed by the greater efficiency in the army and the development of a stronger national defense machine.

In his last annual report just made available for publication, Maj. Gen. Hugh A. Drum, the inspector general of the army, criticizes the scattering of the army enlisted personnel at so many different stations, a practice followed to satisfy the demands of congressmen and to supply personnel with decent living quarters. He openly questions whether this policy has not left the army unfit to perform its mission of "standing ready at any moment to meet any emergency with the full force of the greatest possible combat power which its organization and strength may be capable of developing."

"Unless maintained in such a state," said Maj. Gen. Drum, "a regular army engenders unwarranted reliance on a mythical preparedness and it is uneconomical. Whether the regular army's present state of preparedness and training is adequate for the performance of this mission is highly questionable. There are serious doubts relating to those forces in continental garrisons. The latter are dangerously weak in strength and in modern weapons and equipment.

Hampers Proper Training.

"Scattered in small garrisons along our extensive frontiers and in the central states, no opportunity is offered for practical training in tactical maneuverability and tactical fire power of combined arms. Yet these very qualities are the very essence of the combat power which a regular army should possess in the highest degree."

Throughout his report Maj. Gen. Drum outlined examples of wasteful practices and pointed to policies which would cut the army's overhead, reduce its operating strength and save money for the government. He asserted the army today could save $2,000,000 annually by a proper deflation of non-essential commercial stocks held in army depots and the rental of this space for other purposes. Continental depots, he said, cost $7,000,000 annually to operate and maintain.

VIOLENT RAINSTORM DRENCHES HOOVERS AT VIRGINIA FETE

Cape Henry, Va., April 26.—(AP)—A torrential rain and windstorm today drenched President Hoover and his official party and broke up the 324th anniversary celebration of the landing of the first permanent English colonists. After an uncomfortable delay in getting back to the ship on which he came from Washington, the President, who took his wetting good naturedly, was en route to the White House tonight aboard the department of commerce boat Sequoia.

The storm broke suddenly as Bishop A. C. Thomson, of the Episcopal diocese of southern Virginia, began the opening prayer. President Hoover, hatless, stood in the rain with bowed head while attendants threw a coat around his shoulders and raised an umbrella. He retreated under a tarpaulin, but the horizontal slant given the rain by the wind made this worse than useless.

The presidential party sought refuge in the nearby railroad station, about a quarter of a mile away. Mrs. Hoover was dripping and her blue spring hat was ruined.

Gov. Pollard joined the party in the station and tea was served. The Cape Henry memorial commission and the local committee appeared much more worried over the behavior of the elements than the official party and the distinguished guests.

"The President didn't mind the typical Baptist weather," the governor said, as the special train was en route to Norfolk.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

TOKIO, April 26.—One hundred and eighty aborigines were murdered and more than 100 are missing at Musha, Formosa, following an attack by rival head hunters.

The Tatsua tribe, which attacked, was friendly to the Japanese during the uprising last year of the Musha aborigines, who were placed in subjection by Japanese police when the revolt was crushed.

The Japanese government is now placed in a difficult position in view of the fact that the attacked tribesmen were under the protection of the Japanese police, and that 20 rifles had been loaned to the Tatsua faction for hunting purposes.

U. S. MAY RULE ON SOVIET LUMBER CARGO TODAY

Washington, D. C., April 26.—(AP)—Whether the Russian lumber cargo of the Finnish steamer Anversoise can be imported into the United States is expected to be decided tomorrow by Undersecretary of the Treasury Mills.

However, his decision, which will determine the fate of the shipment brought to Providence, R. I., last week, will fail to set a precedent for basing future answers to questions arising over soviet Russian lumber.

Each shipment must stand upon its merits, treasury officials have announced, and its entry will depend upon whether convicts played a part in its production. Russian lumber from north of latitude 60 has been barred as convict produced.

EIGHT ARE DEAD, FIVE DROWNED IN AUTO MISHAPS

Carthage, N. Y., April 26.—(AP)—Eight persons are dead and one was dying tonight in consequence of two automobile accidents here last night.

Five persons were believed to have drowned in the St. Regis canal at "Skinny" bridge on the Carthage-Watertown highway about 8 o'clock.

Three persons were killed and the driver was injured seriously as their automobile went into the ditch on the Carthage-Natural bridge highway about 1 o'clock this morning. The dead were Miss Elizabeth Fahsel, Thomas Johnson, and Kenneth Johnson, 19, of West Carthage.

The body of James Kenyon, 40, of Watertown, was taken from the St. Regis canal today. Searchers were opening the locks to drag for Charles Young, 47, and William Brown, 46, of Watertown, known to have been with Kenyon, and two unidentified men seen in the car.

3 Killed, 10 Injured.

Kokomo, Ind., April 26.—(AP)—Two persons were killed and four injured in a collision between two automobiles at a crossing north of here this afternoon. The dead are Hubert Titus, 9, Kokomo, and Mrs. Dwight M. Jime, 38, Mexico. Mrs. John Ebel, 50, of Earl Park was fatally injured and six others were injured when her automobile collided with one driven by W. J. Fulton of Chicago.

Five Thought Lost at Oakland.

Oakland, Cal., April 26.—(AP)—Two women and three men, all wealthy Piedmont residents, were believed to have drowned today when their motorboat capsized off Goat island in San Francisco bay. The craft was found bottom up.

Which is mighty conclusive evidence that the generous offer of Pixley and Ehlers in their advertisement of March 28 hit the spot with knowing Chicagoans. For 143,738 eggs is a right sizable number. Nor is it probable that low price alone gave this sudden impetus to the sale of eggs. A SMALL TOWN POLICEMAN NABS 'BIG TIME' THUG

Escaped, Armed Desperado Behind Bars Again.

Dover, N. J., April 26.—[Special.]—Attracting attention by violating a parking ordinance, James Nannery, Sing Sing fugitive and member of the Coutts-Rodgers gang of New York desperadoes, was captured here this afternoon. He was cornered in his coupe of expensive make by a lone "rookie" policeman.

Before the nattily garbed youth, who had been called "the boldest criminal in America," in almost a dozen police alarms, could reach the two automatics he had in his topcoat pocket or the other gun pistol in his vest, the policeman shoved his pistol against the fugitive's stomach. Nannery surrendered.

Woman Flees in His Car.

As Ripley marched the prisoner through town to police headquarters, a woman, identified by the police later as Patricia Pearl Smith, alias Helen Lorraine, emerged from a drug store where she had been making a purchase and fled in the car.

With Nannery in a cell, search was begun for the woman, and a half hour later she was caught by state troopers in Denville. She had changed the license plates on the car, but the troopers recognized her car by the description. She also was lodged in jail.

A loaded automatic pistol was found hidden beneath the dashboard of the car. Each of the side pockets held a loaded revolver. A loaded sawed-off shotgun was on the floor beneath the rumble seat.

Nannery maintained a jaunty air while questioned, finger printed and arraigned. A pose that matched his jaunty and salt touring cap, closely fitting topcoat of the same material, and his dark, carefully pressed suit. He lost the air of bravado as he was being taken to the Morris county jail in Morristown in an armed caravan of three cars manned by state troopers with riot guns.

Planned to Use Gun.

Crestfallen, Nannery told Lieut. Edward Gerhardt of the prosecutor's staff between clenched teeth: "I never expected to be taken alive."

Sought by the police since his escape from Sing Sing on July 15, 1930, where he had been serving a sentence of twelve and one-half to twenty-five years for participation in the holdup of a cream factory in 1925, when an employé was slain, Nannery was the object of a relentless hunt. The search had been spurred by his suspected participation in the shooting of Patrolman Jeremiah Brosman in the prison ward of Fordham hospital on Sept. 12 and in numerous holdups.

With the daring that characterized his activities, Nannery, with his woman companion at his side, drove through the heart of the city to Blackwell and Bergen streets this afternoon. Ignoring conspicuous signs on the sidewalk labeled "Bus stop—no parking," he parked the car at the curb.

"Don't you know you're in a bus stop?" Ripley asked casually. "Let's see your license." Nannery's hand stole to a pocket. But he thrust his arms over his head as Ripley whipped out his service pistol.

KIRKLAND TO GO ON TRIAL AGAIN ON WEDNESDAY

Kirkland is now under life sentence imposed at the first trial. On the granting of the new trial, Prosecutor Underwood announced that Kirkland would be tried for "murder by attack and murder in an attempt to attack."

The four youths indicted with Kirkland for the murder of the Gary girl will not be tried until Kirkland's case is ended.

FRANCE TO WOO RUSSIA FOR NEW BUSINESS PACT

BY EDMOND TAYLOR.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

PARIS, April 26.—France will shortly reopen negotiations for commercial treaties with Russia, La Republique, official organ of the radical Socialist party, disclosed today.

This decision, it is stated, follows months of hesitation during which French statesmen have seen the economic menace of bolshevism grow stronger while they were trying to make up their minds whether to lead a blockade against the soviets or join Italy, Great Britain, and Germany in the bandwagon. France is the only big power in Europe which lacks normal trade relations with Russia.

France Speeds to Beat U. S.

In view of consistently unfavorable trade balances and the general economic crisis, French business men have been complaining against the government's stand-off policy while England and Italy have been concluding favorable treaties with Russia and reaping many important contracts. The report that the United States is planning to send an investigating committee to Russia this summer is believed by some to have determined France to get in ahead of American competitors.

According to La Republique, France's first step in establishing "economic recognition" with Russia will be to recall Ambassador Eugene Herbette, who is unpopular in Moscow. His successor, as yet unnamed, will be charged with making a thorough study of the situation for a month or two.

When the ambassador has sent in his report, a special committee of diplomats and technicians, headed by Anatole de Monzoe, former minister of finance, will visit Russia to formally reopen negotiations for the commercial treaty, which was broken off in 1916.

Plan Publicity Drive.

In order to swing around French public opinion, which is strongly anti-soviet, La Republique says that several of the large newspapers will be persuaded to launch a campaign in favor of a trade pact. Interpellation attacking the government will be staged in the chamber of deputies by the Socialists to reveal how France is losing out by not having commercial relations with Russia.

The nationalists are expected to try to block a new treaty, but several important political leaders, including Foreign Minister Aristide Briand and Premier Pierre Laval, are convinced that the step is necessary.

At present relations between the two countries are virtually non-existent. Moscow has an ambassador in Paris, but M. Herbette left his post at Moscow last summer and never returned. La Republique says that his resignation will be announced shortly.

WAR OVER TIME IS DECLARED IN INDIANA TOWN

La Porte, Ind., April 26.—[Special.]—War between the La Porte city council and the La Porte county commissioners was in prospect here with inauguration of 1931 daylight saving here.

The commissioners, who control the town clock in the courthouse, today refused to have the clock moved ahead one hour. A petition of the La Porte county farm bureau asking that the clock be continued on standard time was granted. Employés in the courthouse also were informed that they would have to operate on standard time.

The city council unanimously voted last week to put the city on daylight time.

BROTHERS' GUILT PROVED IN FACE OF PROPAGANDA

Newspaper Defense Fails of Substantiation.

Twenty-third installment of "The Solution of the Lingle Murder."

BY JOHN BOETTIGER.

CHAPTER XXIII.

The floodgates of propaganda were opened in the effort to save Leo Brothers from his just deserts as the murderer of Alfred Lingle.

Never before probably had such a widespread campaign of propaganda, supported only by falsehood, innuendo, and baseless charges, been invoked to save a Chicago murderer.

A guilty man has no defense, unless it be to divert attention from his own guilt and seek to fasten some opprobrium upon those who accuse him. This was the defense of Brothers.

It was not that the lawyers for the defendant were past masters in the art of propaganda, but that they received an unprecedented degree of aid from some of the newspapers in Chicago which sought to obstruct the prosecution of a murderer who had been trailed and caught by an agency set up and supported by THE TRIBUNE.

Sob Sisters at Work.

Sob sisters from the opposition newspapers were assigned to interview Brothers, who then became a handsome boy, and to write about the white haired mother of Brothers, and of the redheaded sweetheart of the gangster, Mrs. Betty Cook. But they referred to the latter as "Miss" Cook, and glossed over or ignored the fact that both Brothers and Mrs. Cook were married and that each had a son.

No sob sisters were sent to St. Louis, where they could easily have found a woman broken in health by the crimes of her gangster husband, abandoned by him and never given a penny's support. They never pictured Mrs. Leo V. Brothers as she was, nurturing an ailing lad of 10 years and lamenting the sinister shadow cast over the boy by his father, Leo Brothers, a murderer who had killed at least two men in cowardly fashion.

No one seemed to be asking where Betty Cook's baby son was, or her husband. The newspapers did not mention that she had been divorced by one husband, and that shew as still using his name, although she had since married and become estranged from one Albert Smith.

Divorced on Neglect Charge.

These newspapers might easily have learned, as the state's attorney's investigators did, that Betty Cook was divorced by her first husband, Lawrence J. Cook, on charges that she neglected her home and her baby.

The records of the Circuit court revealed that Betty Cook, whose real name was Seawillow Russell Cook, was married to Lawrence Cook on Aug. 27, 1921, and that they separated on Jan. 3, 1925. The husband, filing suit for divorce on Feb. 3, 1927, charges that Mrs. Cook refused to maintain a suitable home and insisted upon living in small apartments, and that she refused to look after her home and baby, Lawrence Jr., who was then only 4 years old. Cook said he was forced to employ a housekeeper and nurse to care for the child.

On May 3, 1927, Judge Thomas J. Lynch granted Cook a divorce and the husband agreed that the child should remain with his mother, but in January, 1928, Cook filed a petition with the court, alleging that Mrs. Cook had remarried and that she had left her baby with her mother, paying no attention to the child and not even going to see the boy. Then Judge Lynch entered an order taking custody of the child away from Betty Cook and giving him into the care of the father.

GETS ATTORNEY AT ONCE

As soon as Leo Brothers' capture was announced, lawyers appeared to defend him. They were Louis Piquett, a former city prosecutor under Mayor Thompson, who had represented other gangsters; Tyrrell Krum, and Robert Ward. Soon afterward Robert E. Cantwell Sr., who in his time had been one of the shrewdest criminal lawyers at the bar, but who had retired, came forth as additional counsel, and later, when the trial of Brothers opened, still another lawyer, Harry J. Cantwell of St. Louis, who had represented the gangster in his many clashes with the law in that city, was added to the defense counsel.

Mrs. Rose Cordell Jessen, the mother of Brothers, came on from Webster Groves, Mo., her home, to be with her son, as any mother would have come to help her son in trouble.

In the beginning, a host of varying alibis was presented, intended to bolster a claim that Brothers was not at the scene of the Lingle murder. Then a cry of frameup was delivered, and all this was presented prominently by the opposition newspapers.

Spread Invective Against Lingle.

Then a mask of suspicion and invective against the dead Lingle was loosed, as if he were on trial, instead of Brothers.

Finally the inevitable lament of persecution was raised, and it was charged by the defense—and broadcast by the rival newspapers—that THE TRIBUNE, in conspiracy with the state's attorney of Cook county and the police department of Chicago, had spent thousands of dollars to pin the guilt for the murder of Lingle upon an innocent man.

Here was an attempt to try THE TRIBUNE, instead of Brothers, but Brothers was tried and he was convicted.

As these suspicions and charges are discussed, it should be borne in mind that they have never been supported by a single word of proof from any one, either before the trial, during the trial, or since.

The propaganda was built up from the irresponsible statements of Brothers and his lawyers, spread through the newspapers desiring to prevent THE TRIBUNE, as they thought, from convicting a murderer. But it was not THE TRIBUNE that accused Brothers, although THE TRIBUNE had helped the authorities to find him. Brothers' accusers were the people of the state of Illinois, represented by the state's attorney of Cook county.

PROPAGANDA FAILS

CANTWELL KEEPS OFF STAND

At the outset the elder Attorney Cantwell announced that he had been within a few feet from Lingle when he was killed, and that he had seen the murderer run away and leap over a fence.

"This man was not Brothers. The man had a cauliflower ear, and he didn't look anything like Brothers," Cantwell said. There was talk of a priest who had been walking with Cantwell who was to verify the statement.

But Mr. Cantwell never testified in the case. There was no evidence whatever that the killer had jumped a fence. The priest never appeared in the trial, although another priest, Father John Reynolds of Notre Dame university, did appear, and give testimony for the state that Brothers was the killer.

This was only the start of a siege of propaganda. The next announcement came two days later, when Defense Attorney Krum stated that Brothers had an "ironclad alibi" to absolve him from the crime.

The Bandage Alibi.

"This ironclad alibi," said Krum, "will prove that Brothers could have been spotted immediately by the bandages on his face if he had committed the murder. Brothers was hurt in an automobile accident a few days before the Lingle murder and a physician had to take several stitches in his face. His face was bandaged and if he had taken off the bandages he would have had a hemorrhage. We have an affidavit from the physician, but we will not give his name at this time."

And what was the truth of this supposed alibi?

John Couillard, the manager at the Riviera hotel, at which Brothers lived at the time of the murder, informed Prosecutor Rathbun that in April or May Brothers had come home at 5 o'clock in the morning, with a bleeding lip, and that a physician had been called.

"Brothers was down at the Vogue at 37th and Cottage Grove and some one hit him down there in a fight," Couillard said.

Physician Tells of Injury.

The state's investigators found the physician who had treated Brothers for that injury. He is Dr. Isaac J. Frisch, who has offices at 25 East Washington street and lives at the Del Prado hotel.

Dr. Frisch said he had treated Brothers, whom he knew as Bader, on May 11. The wound was a superficial one, he said, and he saw Brothers only the one time, but as he recalled, he had taken two fine stitches in the upper lip. This was on May 11, not a "few days," as Krum had said, but 28 days before the murder of Lingle. Brothers was cut in a disorderly Saturday night brawl, and not hurt in an automobile accident, as the lawyer had announced.

And at the trial there was not a trace even of any scar which might have been left by the cut on Brothers' lip, giving further proof that it was a superficial wound.

All this evidence was available at the trial, if Brothers had attempted to rely on such a fake alibi. But there was never a word spoken in the trial concerning it. It may be understood that the purpose of issuing such a statement was for inflaming the public mind with sympathy for Brothers, and without any intention of attempting to brazen it through.

Theme Song of Defense.

It seemed that an idiotic height of the defense campaign of propaganda was reached when Brothers' lawyers presented to the newspapers a song which they said had been written by Brothers. It was entitled: "Just Days That Are Wasted Away," and several of the newspapers printed the song in full.

When Brothers was captured a thorough search of his apartment failed to disclose a single book. There were magazines in a rack, but they were all dated six months back and had been left by a previous tenant of Brothers' apartment. Five minutes' conversation with the gangster would convince any newspaper man that Brothers couldn't have written a nursery rhyme.

But the newspapers which printed the song said of Brothers: "Latest developments show he can write a blues lyric with all the melancholy pathos of an Irving Berlin," and then went on with the song:

"Each day that I'm without you
Just rolls away;
Each night I dream about you
The same old way . . . "

—And more of that. The gangster Brothers himself was reported to have been enraged at his lawyers' effort to picture him, especially before his gang world, as a warbling cherub.

It happened that this song was given to Brothers' eager public on the same day that he was arraigned in court. This was on Jan. 21, and it was Brothers' first opportunity to stand up before the world and assert his innocence. He was led before the bar of Chief Justice McGoorty's court and the clerk intoned:

"Leo V. Brothers, alias Louis Bader, alias Buster, you are charged with murder. How do you plead, guilty or not guilty?"

In a voice hardly audible Brothers replied:

"On the advice of my attorneys I stand mute."

He stood mute. His first opportunity to shout out his innocence and he stood mute. Why? The only theory that appealed to the state's investigators was that Brothers was sending word out to the gangsters who had hired him to kill Lingle that unless they came forward with funds he would confess and implicate them along with himself. This was indignantly denied by defense counsel, but they didn't produce any other reason for Brothers' standing mute.

Stands Mute a Second Time.

There was another time, figuratively speaking, when Brothers stood mute, and although the full facts of this incident were known to the Chicago Evening American, one of the newspapers hostile to the prosecution of Brothers, the story has never before been told.

The story involves the lie detector, that delicate instrument which is aimed to expose a criminal's falsehoods. The lie detector had been used several times during the investigation of the Lingle case.

Dr. John A. Larson, assistant state criminologist, research psychiatrist at the Institute for Juvenile Research and research worker at the University of Chicago, has taken a leading part in the experiments with the lie detector and has examined thousands of criminals with the instrument. He was demonstrating for a class at the university one day and a reporter for the Evening American, who was present, asked Dr. Larson if he would question Leo Brothers under the instrument to see whether Brothers was truthful in his claims of innocence.

Offers to Arrange with Krum.

Dr. Larson agreed, provided there would be no objection by the state's attorneys and the reporter stated he would make the necessary arrangements with Defense Attorney Krum.

At first the reporter stated that Krum seemed willing to subject Brothers to the test, but three weeks went by without action being taken in the matter, and then the reporter asked Dr. Larson to telephone Krum, to assure him that no questions concerning the other crimes of Brothers would be asked.

So Dr. Larson called Krum and read off to the lawyer the questions he would ask Brothers. They were, first, ordinary questions of no significance, intended only to establish the stability of the subject, and then the following:

"Have you any guilty knowledge of the killing of Lingle?"

"Did you kill Lingle?"

"Have you lied on the preceding questions?"

This was all. There was no hint of any questions concerning the murder of Di Blase in St. Louis by Brothers, nor of the other crimes charged against the gangster.

Defendant Is Unwilling.

But Krum replied that Brothers was unwilling to submit to the test. Dr. Larson offered to bring about an agreement with the newspaper man that if the test showed Brothers was lying, the result would never be published. Still Krum said his client refused to take a chance.

Dr. Larson was asked what the refusal implied, and he would make no other comment than to say:

"I have yet to have an innocent man refuse to take the test."

The defense attorneys took Brothers before Frank Bell, the young murderer who had tried to escape the death penalty by inventing a tale that he had participated in the Lingle murder, and Bell, carrying out his descriptions, stated Brothers was not a member of the Lingle murder conspiracy. This was heralded in the opposition press, but Bell was never called as a witness in the trial. The state was prepared to prove Bell was a liar.

Fail to Press Demands.

Propaganda. Would it never cease? The defense lawyers presented a batch of motions before the court, charging that the case against Brothers was framed, and demanding that the records of the state's expenditures be produced. They knew that this was improper evidence, and they knew they couldn't prove anything by it, and they didn't press their demands.

The defense demanded that Charles Rathbun be removed from the prosecution because he represented a private interest. Twice they pressed this demand, but the courts held that State's Attorney Swanson had a right to choose his assistants and that he could choose Rathbun with full propriety if he so desired.

Then Brothers demanded a change of venue from Judge John Prystalski, to whom the case had been assigned and who had ruled against the many defense petitions which were unfounded in law. The defense also refused to go to trial before Judge Philip J. Finnegan, and finally the case was sent to Judge Joseph Sabath for trial.

The state from the first had announced itself ready to go to trial at once, but the defense demanded a reasonable delay, and the state did not oppose this request, but when the case finally was called before Judge Sabath the defense insinuated that the state was seeking delays, which was far from the truth.

Michigan Alibi Falls Down.

The state had always been prepared to try Brothers. The investigation was complete. Brothers' supposed alibis had been found false. There had been a suggestion put out by the defense that on the day of the murder Brothers had been in Michigan, and had telephoned his mother from there.

But the state had Brothers' own statement that he had never telephoned or written to his mother since his flight from Chicago. And they also had the records of the Riviera hotel, which proved that on the day of the Lingle murder Brothers had made three telephone calls from his room, but none of these calls had been anywhere near the time of the murder.

Two days before the date set for the trial the defense attorneys appeared before Judge Sabath with seven new petitions, renewing their charges that the case against Brothers had been framed. Prosecutor Rathbun informed the court that the only purpose of the petitions was to influence the veniremen who had already been summoned for service on the jury that was to try Brothers.

SUNDAY IS JUST ANOTHER DAY IN JAIL FOR BARKER

Hopes to Gain His Freedom on Bond Today.

George [Red] Barker, public enemy and labor racketeer who was freed from Joliet penitentiary on Friday by order of the Illinois Supreme court, was still in the Cook county jail yesterday on an old gun carrying charge, although he had hopes of being released on $10,000 bond today and again taking a place of leadership in the outlaw army of Al Capone.

Attorney W. W. Smith, who obtained from the high court a reversal of the decree of Chief Justice McGoorty of the Criminal court, which sent Barker back to prison as a parole violator, said he expected to furnish a bond today on the gun carrying indictment which made a prisoner of Barker as soon as he emerged from the penitentiary.

Barker Fears Attack, Report.

There were reports that Barker felt safer in jail than out—that he feared he would be killed by rival gangsters. Chief Investigator Pat Roche of the state's attorney's office, however, said he didn't believe Barker to be in any danger because Barker and Capone were "together." If Barker is unable to regain control over the labor unions he dominated before his return to prison last fall, Roche said he believed the public enemy would be welcomed into the Capone fold.

But, according to other information reaching the police, the Capone gang is financially on the rocks. The tremendous costs of hiring lawyers and fighting court cases during the last year has depleted the Capone treasury, the police were told, and the number of breweries, stills and booze warehouses wrecked by state's attorneys' investigators, the police and government agents during the same period has cut off a big slice of the revenue producing agencies.

See Capone Rule Tottering.

Capone's rulership is tottering, too, police said, and he is fearful of assassination, so much so that he might distrust Barker, who was once a Capone foe. Barker is the only survivor of the gang he led and of which Michael Riley, William Clifford, Thomas McElligott and Thomas "Cy" Cauley were members and all of whom were slain.

Attorney Smith said he didn't know what Barker's plans are. Assistant State's Attorney Donald Thompson, who forced Barker's resignation as business agent of the coal teamsters' union, said he would do his utmost to prevent Barker's return to that or any other union.

FRANCE DEMANDS LONDON NAVAL PACT BE REVISED

Want Right to Replace Scrapped Ships.

BY JOHN STEELE.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

LONDON, April 26.—The French proposal to the naval agreement with Italy, turned down by Great Britain last week, was actually an attempt to revise the London limitation treaty between the United States, Great Britain, and Japan, it is learned from official sources.

The French dug their heels in on the position that they have a right to replace the antiquated tonnage of 1925 and 1926 and are holding to this contention at all costs. In order to clinch open a new door for an amicable maintenance of this policy the French suggested that the treaty signed a year ago should be revised so as to permit the three signatories to recast their building programs a year earlier than was originally provided. Thus there is the possibility of a naval race a year ahead of the naval conference scheduled for 1936.

Britain Turns Down Offer.

Although the suggestion has not been published, the British foreign office realized that the proposal was equally distasteful to the United States and Japan, and therefore turned it down.

It is understood that the British memorandum to the French, submitted to Paris today, embodies a counter proposal. Foreign Secretary Arthur E. Henderson's note suggests that both France and Italy adhere to the London covenant, which would be changed by the provisions of a minor conference of the five powers in 1935. This, it is stated, would not affect the full negotiations a year later, but would permit the French to express their opinion and grant them the right to continue building if she desired. In view of the French attitude there seems little likelihood of an acceptance.

Paris Pessimistic Over Note.

PARIS, April 26.—(AP)—Great Britain's reply to the French note in connection with the tri-partite naval treaty, which is believed to contain counter proposals, was received in Paris today. The foreign office and the minister of marine began to study it immediately. The French note offered to go ahead with the naval accord, leaving the question of 1934-1936 superannuated tonnage until 1935.

Le Temps points out tonight that if the reply makes fresh proposals, instead of flatly rejecting the old ones, there still is hope for a Franco-Italian accord. However, there is a strain of pessimism in other quarters. The general belief is that the whole situation is the result of the method of R. L. Craigie, British admiralty expert, in negotiating separately with Paris and Rome.

The French feel they are not to blame inasmuch as it was Great Britain which conducted the negotiations. Le Temps says it would be odd for the English to refuse the 1935 proposal, while asserting strong faith in the outcome of the 1932 disarmament conference, which should have the effect of limitation of navies.

UPWARD TREND IN INDUSTRY REPORTED BY U. S. BUREAU

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., April 26.—[Special.]—The United States employment service, recently reorganized by Secretary of Labor Doak, made public today a survey of employment conditions in March in which it states that operating schedules increased somewhat in several of the major industries, prominent among them iron and steel and automobiles.

It described the situation as showing "some improvement" in March, but added that operations generally remained below those usually in effect at this time of year. While additional help was engaged in a number of establishments the report stated, the surplus of labor was large.

A notable increase appeared in the shipbuilding industry, especially on the Atlantic seaboard, the report said. Part time schedules continued in radio plants and seasonal influences were responsible for a further curtailment of employment in the coal mines.

Hopeful features were additional employment with the opening of lake and river transportation and increased employment on highway projects.

An increase in building operations was reported but with large surpluses of building labor. An increase in demand for all forms of outdoor labor was predicted with the approach of more favorable weather.

Hurley at Hot Springs Hospital for Needed Rest

Hot Springs, Va., April 26.—(AP)—Secretary of War Patrick J. Hurley, who is making his headquarters at the Army and Navy hospital, today said he was here not because he was sick but because he was a "very tired man" and felt the thermal baths would give him needed relaxation. Secretary Hurley, who arrived here last night, intimated he would be here a week or ten days.

SNOWDEN BARES BUDGET TODAY; BRITAIN FIDGETS

Rich and Poor Nervous; Fear More Taxes.

LONDON, April 26.—(AP)—Pale and even frailer than usual, but still the game chancellor of the exchequer in the Labor government, Philip Snowden will rise almost from a sick bed to the floor of the house of commons tomorrow afternoon to introduce the British national budget.

Serious illness and an operation have failed to keep Snowden from "opening the budget" personally. He has insisted on wrestling with its twin demons, a deficit of some $117,500,000 and about $250,000,000 in new revenue which must be found for the national balance sheet in 1931-1932, calling for more than $400,000,000 in expenditures.

No event of the year rivals the interest of King George's subjects in problems of government and national finance as does the chancellor's budget day speech, with its closely guarded secrets and last minute revelations of new taxes or, more rarely, relief from taxation.

Rich and Poor Anxious.

Tonight the humble Englishman who uses tobacco, drinks a daily glass of bitter beer, or buys gasoline for his small motor car, as well as he of title and wealth at the other end of the social scale who maintains town and country homes and shooting estates, is wondering whether he will be hit by the new financial edicts which will come from Snowden's thin lips.

A touch of melodrama will be added to the usual suspense of budget day by the presence in the gallery of doctors and nurses and Mrs. Snowden, who have been caring for the chancellor. Even the chancellor's iron will may not be sufficient to stand the physical strain of a long analysis of the government's financial affairs and, should he tire, help would be close at hand.

To this tense situation Prime Minister MacDonald has added a final dash of mystery by departing from the traditional parliamentary procedure for the house of commons next week. This is to deal with other business, which might arise out of the budget.

British Landlords Worried.

The consensus of observers is that British landlords have every reason to be nervous about what the budget holds in store for them, for it is expected that taxation of land values will be the central theme of Snowden's program. If this prediction comes true other aspects of the budget are expected to be humdrum.

However, new land taxes would be a signal for opposing parliamentary forces to gird for battle in another phase of labor's campaign against "landlordism."

The chancellor has refused to use a special high chair for tomorrow's speech and has waved aside all other considerations of his physical weakness, declaring that he will stand as customary to deliver his message. The speech is expected to last a little longer than an hour.

Greek Foreign Minister to Come to U. S. in October

ATHENS, April 26. — Foreign Minister Michalakopoulos has decided to make his trip to the United States in October. He had planned to go in June, but his duties as Greek delegate to the Pan-European conference have made postponement necessary.

PLANE RETURNS WOMAN TO CITY AFTER OPERATION

Mrs. Ellen Williams, 23 years old, 8816 South Aberdeen street, was in Holy Cross hospital yesterday recovering from an emergency operation for which she was flown to Columbus, O., Saturday afternoon.

The operation, a delicate bit of surgery for the removal of a tooth from the right lung, was successful and yesterday morning Mrs. Williams was flown back to Chicago and taken to the Holy Cross hospital for treatment for pneumonia which developed after she had swallowed the tooth.

Find Tooth in Lung.

Mrs. Williams, wife of Elmer Williams, an electrical engineer for the Illinois Bell Telephone company, missed a tooth about ten days ago. She thought nothing of it until a few days later she became ill and developed a high fever, indicative of pneumonia. She was taken to the hospital here and an X-ray showed the missing tooth lodged in her lung.

Make Trip by Plane.

Her family physician, Dr. Vincent F. Torczynski, chief medical officer of the Holy Cross hospital, advised a trip to a Columbus specialist for the removal of the tooth. A plane was chartered Saturday afternoon and, despite the foggy weather, the trip to Columbus was made in 2 hours and 40 minutes.

Dr. Charles S. Bowen, the specialist, successfully removed the tooth, and yesterday morning the patient, accompanied by the family physician, flew back to Chicago much improved, but still under treatment for pneumonia.

GERMANY TO PUT POCKET WARSHIP INTO SEA MAY 19

Hindenburg to Christen Ersatz Preussen.

BY SIGRID SCHULTZ.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

BERLIN, April 26. — The pride of Germany's post-war navy, the famous pocket battleship Ersatz Preussen, is scheduled to slide down the ways at the former kaiser's war port, Kiel, on May 19. President von Hindenburg will christen the vessel. The admiralty is trying to keep secret the name of the ship until the launching, but it is believed here that the vessel will bear the name of Admiral Scheer, the victor of the battle of Jutland.

Despite its relatively small tonnage, the maximum 10,000 tons permitted Germany by the treaty of Versailles, the Ersatz Preussen is believed by naval experts to have a combat strength equaling that of a battleship double its size. This has been achieved by welding the ship's plates instead of riveting, by the use of light metals to the utmost possibility without endangering the ship's seaworthiness and stability, and by equipping her with an entirely new and highly efficient type of Diesel motor.

Vessel Heavily Armored.

The reduction of weight thus achieved enabled the builders to fit the vessel with a heavy armament hitherto unknown in ships of her size. The Ersatz carries six 11 inch guns in triple turrets, one fore and one aft, eight 6 inch guns, four 3.5 inch and anti-aircraft guns, and six 20 inch torpedo tubes, mounted aft.

The motors, said to be the largest in the world, generate 50,000 horsepower. They weight 16 pounds per horsepower. At the end of the war the average Diesel engine, fitted for maritime uses, weighed 100 pounds per horsepower.

The motors are designed to give the pocket battleship a speed of 26 knots, but experts are confident she will attain a speed of at least 27 knots, probably more. The engines give the ship a cruising radius of 10,000 miles.

Will Build Second Ship.

The Ersatz Preussen is said to be practically invulnerable against mines. By a special protection device against mines, the ship is believed to be able to pass a mine barrage without serious hazard. Even if the vessel strikes a mine, she will still be able to maneuver, it is stated.

The battleship is the first of a squadron of six battle cruisers to replace the six obsolete ships allowed Germany by the Versailles treaty. The first appropriation for the construction of the second pocket battleship, the battle cruiser B, was recently approved by the reichstag.

FORMER BANKER, A PRISON TRUSTY, IS FOUND SLAIN

Baton Rouge, La., April 26.—(AP)—The body of a trusty convict, Joseph W. Stinson, 40, former president of the defunct Union Trust and Savings bank of Gretna, La., was found late today on the Mississippi river levee ten miles below here. He had been shot through the head and chest and his hands were tied with ropes. Penitentiary officials said indications were he had been "taken for a ride."

Shortly after the body was removed to an undertakers' establishment Gov. Huey P. Long conferred with Warden Wade Long and sheriff's deputies. Stinson was sentenced in June, 1929, to serve six years for alleged embezzlement of $1,836 from a depositor of the bank in Gretna, across the river from New Orleans.

Stinson, as a trusty, maintained a residence in Baton Rouge. He was last seen Friday night in the penitentiary offices in a Baton Rouge office building.

Violent Snowstorm Hits Villages Near Buffalo

Buffalo, N. Y., April 26. — (AP) — A snowstorm, swept along by a 70 mile gale, descended with violence tonight on towns and villages south of this city and left in its wake branch stripped or uprooted trees and stranded motorists. Three inches of snow were reported at Delevan.

SHOUSE SEES '32 BATTLE WAGED OVER ECONOMICS

Providence, R. I., April 26.—(AP)—Jouett Shouse, chairman of the Democratic national executive committee, tonight said the economic problems of the nation would be the chief issues of political battle in the next presidential campaign. Shouse spoke at a dinner in honor of the memory of Thomas Jefferson under the auspices of the Democratic state committee.

Although Shouse said he hoped the Democratic party would have the courage to face the prohibition issue "without equivocation in making a definite pronouncement of its stand on its platform for 1932," he would not have it become the dominating point of political debate.

Liquor Seized, 30 Arrested in Cape May County Raids

Atlantic City, N. J., April 26.—[Special.]—Thousands of dollars' worth of liquor was seized, and more than thirty persons were arrested in twenty-two raids last night by federal prohibition agents in Wildwood, North Wildwood, and Cape May City. No reason was assigned for the wholesale round-ups, which were quietly made on the dot of 6.

REVOLT LEADERS ESCAPE CHILE'S PRISON ISLAND

Ship's Crew "Kidnaps" 3; Flee to Paris.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

SANTIAGO, Chile, April 26.—Political quarters here are excited over the escape from Easter island by Col. Marmaduke Grove, Gen. Bravo, and Dr. Salas Romo, who were exiled there by the Ibañez government after an unsuccessful revolution in the southern city of Concepcion last year.

The story of their escape, which has just become public, makes romantic reading. According to a private cable from Paris a small schooner was ordered to proceed to Easter island from the Polynesian port of Papeete, Tahiti, located in the Society island group and owned by France, ostensibly to pick up some motion picture operators and material that was reported to have been left behind by a previous expedition.

Trick Chilean Officials.

The Chilean authorities were deceived and when the schooner arrived off the island after a 50 day voyage from Polynesia, the crew forced the governor to release the conspirators. They were taken aboard the schooner and back to the French colony where they were given transportation for Europe to join the active band of political exiles in Paris.

The uprising, for which the escaped men suffered banishment, occurred last September when two American airmen flew them over the Andes from Buenos Aires to Concepcion. The attempt to incite the garrison there failed and the party, including the Americans, were jailed. One American, Delarin, filed away his prison bars and escaped into Argentina; and the other, Smith, was subsequently released.

Island 2,000 Miles Out.

Easter island is Chile's most remote possession, lying 2,000 miles out in the Pacific. Its population consists of 200 Kanakas, a score of lepers, the Chilean governor, and an Englishman who acts for the British company that rents the island for sheep rearing. A Chilean warship visits the colony once a year.

Boy Accidentally Hangs Himself in Haymow

Cogdon, Ia., April 26.—[Special.]—Marcus O'Rourke, 15, was strangled to death here last night. He and his brother had rigged up a swing by tieing a loop in the haymow rope. He went to the mow to shake down hay and then attempted to swing down on the rope. His hands slipped, the loop caught around his neck, and he was strangled.

FIND FARO MAN'S CASH BOX; WIFE TURNS OVER KEY

Slain Man's Body Viewed by Mrs. Blacklidge.

Canniff was asked if he could not persuade Mrs. Ruth Perry, the widow, to tell what Perry had done with his money. To this Canniff replied that she knew nothing more than she had already told and that she was ill at home as a result of the shock she had sustained.

According to the Chicago police, Canniff was arrested on a charge of participating in a confidence game in June, 1929, but was released when a grand jury returned a no bill.

Capt. J. T. Husone of the New York Central railroad police told Capt. Hamilton and Chief of Police Samuel Lenon that Canniff was well known as a card player and had at times been in games on the fast trains running between New York and Chicago.

Double-Crossing Theory Held.

After hearing Mrs. Blacklidge and Canniff the police released the latter. Mrs. Blacklidge returned to Chicago. The best theory of the police still is that Perry was slain for double-crossing his pals and holding out their share of the loot in the big swindle. The former internal revenue collector declared that in the faro game, when Perry and she had apparently won more than $200,000, he actually wept when informed they would have to display $50,000 in cash before they would be paid off.

With Mrs. Blacklidge when she came from Chicago was George Kurfess, a real estate dealer, 10644 South Seeley avenue, and a woman friend.

Mrs. Blacklidge, who had left a sick bed, and is suffering from a bronchial cough, asserted she felt immeasurably better after satisfying her smallest remaining doubt that Perry was the swindler who had defrauded her.

The South Bend police had been informed that Fred Litsinger, automobile dealer and nephew of the board of review member, would come here during the evening to look at Perry's body. He had not arrived at a late hour and it was suggested then that he might come in tomorrow.

Search On for Pair.

So far only the South Bend police and coroner have taken any strong interest in tracing the murderers of the confidence game man, although the Chicago authorities have made inquiries and a search for Browder and Reynolds. Neither police force regards it as its own duty to run down the swindle affair in downstate Illinois.

One of the steps taken is an attempt to trace all the telephone calls that have been directed to the Canniff home here in recent months.

POLICE RECORD IS BARED.

Roy Browder, alias Burgess, who is being sought in connection with the Blacklidge-Litsinger swindle and the murder of George Perry at South Bend, has been involved in a number of confidence games in Chicago and other cities, according to police records. He has been arrested sixteen times by the police of Louisville, Ky., and served a six months' term there for one of his escapades as a gambler.

On two occasions the Chicago police had information that while working as a professional gambler here he acted as the accomplice of stickup men who took the jewelry as well as the money of patrons. Once, it was related, he admitted a crew of bandits into a north side gambling house and gave them signals indicating which of the women present had the most valuable jewels.

Another anecdote concerns a raid made by robbers on a gambling place in a loop hotel. One of the male patrons, it was said, standing beside Browder, who had pretended to be only a game conductor, tossed his large diamond ring into the hat of a neighbor. When one of the robbers asked him where it was, the man who hid the jewel declared he never had a ring. But Browder, with his hands up, motioned with a thumb to the other victim's hat.

Urges Passage of Measures to Curb Bail Bond Abuses

Support of the proposed laws to curb bail bond abuses pending before the Illinois legislature was urged yesterday by Arthur Andersen, chairman of the board of trustees of Northwestern university. The laws, sponsored by the Commonwealth club, have been passed by the state senate and are to come before the house this week.

The bills provide for strict licensing of all professional bondsmen, for simplified and direct procedure to sell real estate scheduled on forfeited bonds, for making bond forfeiture in a felony case an additional felony charge in itself and other renovations of the present laws. The bills passed the senate without a single vote of dissent.

"Modern times require modern methods," said Mr. Andersen. "The business details of our legal procedure should be handled in a businesslike way. In the last 14 years Cook county has realized only $54,530 on bond forfeitures of $18,075,500. This is not only poor business but demonstrates the impossibility of the present laws to function.

"While it is not proposed that bail bond procedures shall constitute a profitable business, still it is the intention that a money penalty shall attach to bond forfeiture as a deterrent to criminal activity. The proof that penalties incurred are negligible explains in part the world-wide accusation that Chicago has become a haven of criminals.

"We cannot expect our police, legal, and judicial forces to attain notable results if they must work under the handicap of imperfect and outworn regulations. I do not see how these bills can fail to receive the most general and whole-hearted support, for the present evils are obvious and notorious. If the public and the legislature fail in this respect, then our condition is indeed hopeless."

Mr. Andersen, who is president of Arthur Anderson & Co., praised the Commonwealth club in concentrating efforts in perfecting one step of legal procedure. The bills were introduced by State Senator Arthur A. Huebsch.

ASK COURT O. K. FOR SCRUTINY OF ALCOCK ACCOUNT

Assistant State's Attorney Charles J. Mueller, in charge of the grand jury investigation of the police department, said yesterday that he will present a petition this morning to Chief Justice John P. McGoorty of the Criminal court asking authority to inspect the bank accounts of Acting Police Commissioner Alcock, Chief of Detectives Norton, Deputy Police Commissioner Scanlan, Deputy Detective Chief Rafferty, and thirty-seven captains.

This action, following the investigation of the bank accounts of seventeen captains last week, is expected to conclude the investigation. Subpœnas will be served on all the banks in the city requiring them to search for the accounts of the men named and bring what they find before the jury next Monday. After the records are obtained all those officials whose deposits appear larger than normal are to be questioned under oath after being requested to sign immunity waivers.

KING CAROL TELLS "SWEETIE" TO GO, BUT SHE SAYS 'NO'!

(Copyright: 1931: By the New York Times.)

BUCHAREST, April 26.—A new disclosure concerning the relations between King Carol and Mme. Magda Lupescu was made today. On demand of the government the king yesterday urged the red haired beauty, who is still a resident of Bucharest, to go abroad for a few weeks. The government urgently desired that an alibi should be established by her appearing in Paris, Vienna or Zurich with the object of convincing the world that revelations concerning her presence here and intervention in Rumanian politics were untrue.

To the chagrin of the government, Carol's sweetheart refused pointblank to leave the country. When the king urged her to accept the advice of his ministers, she replied that she "deeply distrusted the possible attitude of the new premier, Prof. Jorga." Coolness between her and Carol has resulted.

La Follette Urges Vigorous Step to End Depression

New York, April 26.—(AP)—Senator Robert M. La Follette in a speech here tonight blamed President Hoover for the duration of the business depression, declared the President bankrupt of the ability of leadership, and warned more vigorous steps must be taken to meet the crisis created by protracted hard times.

THIS COP PROVES HIS GOOD MEMORY FOR STOLEN DOGS

Sergt. John Wall of the Marquette police station was passing the home of Henry Urbaniak, 1906 West 17th street, when he noticed a repainted automobile at the curb. In it sat Urbaniak, who is 24 years old.

In it, too, a few seconds later, sat a brown Pomeranian dog, which ran out of the house and leaped in beside Urbaniak. Sergt. Wall's memory for dogs and teletype messages is excellent, so he got into the car, too, and ordered Urbaniak to drive to the station.

There it was found that the dog, named Prince, was a $1,500 prize winner which had been stolen from Miss Mary Beth Brown, 5451 West End avenue, on March 29. Urbaniak asserted that he had found the dog near Miss Brown's home and was not aware of his high value.

ROB SOUTH SIDE NIGHT CLUB AS GUESTS DANCE

Two gunmen held up the manager of the Bagdad club at 6400 Cottage Grove avenue early this morning and got $600 from the office safe. Dancers and diners on the floor were unaware of the robbery raid. The club is on the second floor of the Persning hotel. The robbers entered the office, which is separated from the dance floor, threatened the manager, George O'Hare, with pistols, and compelled him to open the safe. They escaped through the hotel without arousing suspicion.

Three gunmen entered the drug store of Joseph P. Simons at 3401 Broadway shortly before midnight and compelled the proprietor to open the safe, from which they took $200.

WALKER BLAMES COMMUNISTS FOR INVESTIGATION

Alleges Subtle Influence Back of Charges.

New York, April 26.—[Special.]—Describing himself as one of the first targets in a nation-wide communist plot, Mayor James J. Walker today directly accused communist propagandists as the real instigators of the New York City corruption issue.

The mayor declared that the criticism leveled at him and other public officials is part of a plot to gradually undermine the public's faith in the municipal, state, and federal government. Although he mentioned no names, the mayor expressed his scorn for "parlor radicals" and "certain high churchmen" who are "active in fostering the movement against his administration."

He made these charges after a dramatic entrance into the grand ballroom of the Hotel Astor, at the communion breakfast of the New York fire department Holy Name society. The Rev. Charles E. Coughlin, radio pastor of the Little Church of the Flower, near Detroit, was making a plea for faith in Mayor Walker.

Calls Attacks Subtle.

In sounding the communist keynote, which Mayor Walker elaborated upon later, Father Coughlin directly named John Haynes Holmes and Rabbi Stephen S. Wise, but Mayor Walker mentioned no names.

"In this country," the mayor said, "there is a subtle and hidden purpose on the attacks that are being made on men holding public office. There is a very definite purpose of tearing down the structure of this municipality that has won the admiration of the people of the world—the imperial city of New York.

"These efforts will become more manifest as the movement to destroy confidence in city officials grows. It is a matter not so much for me to worry about as for business to worry about. After they undermine public confidence in the municipal government, then the state, then the nation—then they will go into the business world.

"Then, I say to you, Mr. Publisher"—the mayor shook his finger emphatically and his voice rose to a high pitch—"then I say to you that they will get into the newspaper offices and they will dictate, Mr. Publisher, what you are to write. We are merely the temporary targets to shoot at. We have news value.

"Like Shining Marks."

"But this propaganda can best be spread through the world by shooting at somebody in the public eye. I have seen them myself. I have seen them attack the police.

"The dangerous individual," he shouted, "is the parlor communist. He is the fellow who exercises the greatest influence and causes the great misery by his smooth approach. But the most dangerous one of all is he who ascends the pulpit pretending to a background of Christ's holy word—or the Korah."

Plan to Herd Sea Turtles with an Ocean Liner

Seattle, Wash., April 26.—(AP)—An attempt to herd giant sea turtles with an ocean liner will be made on the forthcoming cruise of the 400 foot steamship Dorothy Alexander into Mexican waters. Capt. M. A. Sohst said he believed he could drive the turtles into shallow water by blowing the ship's whistle and threshing the liner's propellors, after which they can be caught with nets.

MADEIRA TENSE AS PORTUGUESE ARMADA NEARS

FUNCHAL, Madeira, April 26.—(AP)—A tense expectancy settled over Funchal today as military and civilian residents awaited the arrival of the Portuguese armada, which has been sent to put down the rebellion started here a few weeks ago.

Since the departure of the liner Armadale Castle Friday, which carried away more than 100 visitors, the only foreigners on the island are the staffs of business concerns, who are unwilling to leave their posts. Every soldier has joined the revolt, but civilian islanders have remained aloof from military service, but their attitude toward the rebel junta is sympathetic.

At first reports of the approach of the punitive force from Lisbon many islanders fled from Funchal to the hills. Most of them have returned and there is a general tendency to regard any threats of bombardment of the city by government forces as a "bluff."

20 UNAWARE AS 2 BANDITS ROB AUTO COMPANY

Two armed bandits, unnoticed by 20 customers and several clerks in the Douglas Auto Parts company, 3007 South State street, yesterday afternoon walked to the cashier's cage and scooped $150 from the till and then went to the vault, where they took $1,500. The bandits walked out quietly.

At the cashier's cage the bandits held up Edward Weisman, 1514 South Kostner avenue, part owner of the company. In the vault they pointed their revolver at Miss Mary Stenbom, 23 years old, 700 Oakland boulevard. The bandits are believed to be the pair who took $2,500 from the L. Fish Furniture company store at 1906 South Wabash avenue Saturday night in an almost identical robbery.

MR. MONTAGU NORMAN'S NEW PROJECT.

As neither Mr. Montagu Norman of the Bank of England nor the Americans with whom he consulted has stated with candor and precision what brought him to these shores, comment must be based pretty largely on guesses.

The best of them seems to be that Mr. Norman wants to organize an international bank for foreign financing. This, too, is something of a euphemism. The purpose of the bank would be to finance the more backward and riskier countries. According to a recent dispatch from Basle, Switzerland, where the Bank for International Settlements is located, Mr. Norman's proposed bank would have a total capitalization of half a billion dollars, of which 50 million would be paid in. "Its function would be to finance long term credits to the governments of eastern Europe and South America by lending them the proceeds from bonds which the new bank would issue in its own name as mortgage companies do."

In Basle they say that the plan met a cool reception in this country and in France. In London the Daily Mail says that only one or two of the Americans consulted were opposed and the rest approved at least the general outline of the scheme. The two statements cannot be reconciled, but the statement from London suggests that Mr. Norman is not without hope.

Certainly if the plan is accepted by American bankers it will be a confession of incompetence and timidity. To the British the plan offers a possibility of continuing to command the international financial markets even though the United States now controls a far larger share of the world's capital available for export. To the United States, on the contrary, it means that our money is to be invested in foreign lands without assuring this country the indirect return in exports of our goods, which is perhaps the most important reason for undertaking somewhat risky foreign ventures.

The bank proposed by Mr. Norman does offer one attraction to bankers, an advantage not unlike that offered to the individual investor by investment trusts. The banker will not have to do any thinking; he can pass that unpleasant task along to some one else in Basle, Geneva, or London. To be sure, the same advantage, if it is an advantage, might be obtained by organizing a bank for foreign loans in this country without foreign help. Such a bank if advancing money to Poland, for example, for the construction of railroads, could and no doubt would specify that sundry materials not obtainable in Poland would be purchased in this country. It is a little difficult to believe that Mr. Norman's bank would show an equal interest in the encouragement of American manufactures and trade.

ANOTHER STRATEGIC RETREAT IN RUSSIA.

When Lenin was forced by conditions to restore some of the practices of capitalism, the right of private trade among others, he was candid and strong enough to admit it as a retreat, a strategic retreat, of course. Stalin ended Lenin's "new economic policy" and announced his determination to enforce communist principles without compromise, but the necessities imposed by the five year plan are stronger than any dogma. The latest news is that wages are to be determined by work done and not according to the supposed needs of the worker. This is abrogation of one of the central principles of socialism: from every one according to his ability, to every one according to his needs.

This dogma is dear to the sentimentalist. It represents what we believe is called the higher justice, though to many of us the justice is not as clear as it might be. Its main weakness is that it doesn't work. This is denied, of course, by the theoretical socialist, but experience does not support him. Stalin, although he purports to be a communist of the strictest orthodoxy, probably did not expect it to work and now he has reached a point in his experimentation when the demonstration of its unworkability has become so conclusive and results so critical that he can afford to act in accordance with it. So the soviet rule throws overboard the most sacred principle of socialism and adopts openly what is the mainspring of the capitalist system. The economic equality which communism is guaranteed to establish goes glimmering and the proletarian will get what he works for rather than what he is supposed to need.

This will of course be justified by the party directors as merely a temporary resort, another strategic retreat, but it is in fact a surrender of the essential principles of communism, an adoption of the essential principle of individualism. The whole controversy between the two orders of society depends upon this issue. Democratic individualism believes that communism will not work because it defies any relation between effort and reward. For this relation communism in practice substitutes organized force and cannot do without it. But the substitution does not accomplish its purpose even under conditions so favorable to tyranny as exist in Russia.

RECLAIMING CHICAGO'S BADLANDS.

The Regional Plan Association of New York has recommended the creation of a residential district for the white-collared class on the lower east side of Manhattan. With modern apartment buildings and adequate parks the district might be made genuinely attractive.

Chicago presents an even larger opportunity for reclamation. In a semicircle several miles wide surrounding the central business district is an area characterized by tumble-down buildings, many of them more or less abandoned. The region formerly was that to which the immigrants flocked upon arrival in Chicago. The cutting off of immigration has reduced the inflow of population, and meanwhile the immigrants of other years have found more attractive places to live farther out from the center of the city. In consequence buildings have depreciated to the point where hundreds of them ought to be condemned, and land values likewise in many instances have shrunk.

These neighborhoods have some parks and could be made attractive with a few more. They are well equipped with schools and they offer the best that the city has in transportation. They are close to the business district and therefore could provide a great saving in time to office workers who must enter and leave the loop every day.

The task of reclamation, of course, could not be met by rebuilding small units. Whole blocks would have to be taken over and rebuilt from the ground up. That this might be done at a moderate profit is suggested by the success which has attended the Marshall Field and Rosenwald housing projects.

AUTHORIZING THE CITY MANAGER PLAN.

Two years ago a bill to permit cities and villages to adopt a city manager plan by popular referendum was introduced in the Illinois legislature upon the initiative of the Chicago government planning commission. The bill was said to be the best drafted proposal presented at that session, but it met the bitter opposition of the Thompson-Small forces and was defeated in the senate.

It was reintroduced by Senator Huebsch at the present session, senate bill 359, and has now reached third reading.

THE TRIBUNE supported the measure at the last session and believes it should be enacted. It does not impose the city manager plan, but only permits any city or village to adopt it if it thinks its conditions justify the experiment. A further safeguard is provided in a provision requiring adoption by referendum.

The city manager plan has worked well in some communities and not so well in others. But Illinois is one of the few states which do not permit adoption where wanted. A few years ago an article [XVI.] was added to our cities and villages act permitting the adoption of the plan by cities and villages of not more than 5,000 population, but we think the right should be extended to all municipalities.

The plan does not abolish the council, which remains the chief governing body, but authorizes the city council or village board of trustees, after approval by the people on referendum, to appoint a manager. The bill also provides for a mayor who would be president of the council as at present, and makes various provisions for the makeup of the council, for elections, redistricting, for the fundamentals of council procedure, the powers and duties of the manager, etc.

Whether this system is preferable to the existing system under the present cities and villages act is a question which would not be foreclosed by the enactment of the bill. Any city or village could study its provisions and make the experiment or not, as its people decided. We think they should have the opportunity as they have not under the present cities and villages act. Our municipal governments are far from perfect and in many cases are in need of improvement. The way should be opened to well considered experiment and practical reforms.

Editorial of the Day

"I AM THE STATE."

[St. Louis Post-Dispatch.]

In vetoing the bill to repeal the prohibition laws of Illinois, Gov. Emmerson has usurped the will of the people, violated his party's pledge, gravely abused his official authority and has attempted to defend his action with an explanation which ought, in our opinion, to end his official career.

The governor speaks of the lawless possibilities that might follow repeal of the prohibition act. It is not a recent discovery. All this had been dinned into the ears of the people during the campaign. Even so, they voted for repeal. The responsibility for the decision is theirs. It is not Gov. Emmerson's. And when he revives the shopworn fears and alarms which, it may be observed, have not materialized in the states that have repealed their prohibition acts, he merely elaborates a feeble plea with fanciful speculation.

Finally the governor takes refuge in that weather-worn sanctuary, "I am not for nullification." Again let it be said his individual choice in the premises is neither relevant nor competent. If nullification is the word it is the people of Illinois that have pronounced it. Yet this governor who shudders at nullification by the people does not himself hesitate to nullify the referendum, or to nullify the action of the legislature in carrying out the mandate of the people.

The Republican party of Illinois has had its Len Smalls, its Bill Thompsons, its Frank Smiths, and it is dying under their blight. Its 500,000 Republican majority was swept away last November by the leadership of James Hamilton Lewis, whose reputed political skill and forensic talents could never have so availed except they had been vitalized by forthright honesty. So Illinois returned Mr. Lewis to the senate by a majority of 700,000, and in that election only three counties in the state remained steadfastly Republican. Now comes Gov. Emmerson to tell the people of Illinois that their votes do not count, that they don't know what they want, that his personal views must prevail over referendums and legislatures.

If the others have killed the Republican party of Illinois Mr. Emmerson has buried it.

LEARN TO SWIM.

MR. P. H. HUEDEPOHL advises communities to conduct a yearly "learn to swim" campaign. A factory manufacturing swimming suits has reprinted this detailed advice and will supply the pamphlet on request.

The first essential is to get newspaper support. One newspaper of a city can usually be persuaded to take the project under its wing. Many of them now conduct annual swimming contests for the monarchs of the sport. The plan of promoting universal swimming, therefore, would find some one of the newspapers in the right mood.

The newspaper runs a series of articles stressing the fun of swimming, the health benefits, and the insurance against drowning. The facts of the campaign are recited—who the teachers are, the place, the hours, and the divisions into classes by age and sexes. The paper prints an application blank with instructions as to how it is to be filled in and where it is to be sent. The instruction is given in groups. The instructors chosen must know how to give group instruction. The classes are run in half hour periods from ten in the morning until nine at night. After each fifth day of instruction there is a sixth day given over to testing the pupils.

The method of teaching swimming to groups is given in text books. The American Red Cross has one and there are many others. Almost every swimming instructor has had some experience in teaching swimming to groups.

It may be desirable to arrange for some sort of badge showing membership and some sort of an attendance card, or some prizes for those who show superior progress.

The first meeting is given over to registration of applicants and classification of pupils. Some amount of testing the fitness and ability is generally required but, as a rule, the statements made are accepted, and physical and other examinations are superficial.

The first lessons are for the purpose of removing fear. The pupil is to learn that water as a support and environment is almost on a par with earth and air. He learns that the dangers of swimming are largely of one's own making. The great hazards are almost altogether the result of panic—individual panic or group panic. The installation of confidence follows on the heels of the banishment of fear. Then follows the technique of swimming—breathing, rhythm, position of the head, and use of the muscles.

1. Ovarian extract. It is more effective and can be used in smaller doses when given hypodermically.
2. Change of life.

MIXING DISEASES.

C. A. E. writes:

1. What causes a boy's fingers to become waxy when cold and when bathing in the ocean?
2. What is indican in the urine and the cause?
3. What causes a swelling of the palate and a sore throat?

REPLY.

1. Some condition akin to Raynaud's disease.
2. Indican is a product of chemical processes occurring in the digestive tract. Formed there, it is absorbed and excreted by the kidneys. Indicanuria is not of great importance but it generally indicates a need of some change in the dietary habits.
3. Infection of some sort. You mix your diseases.

SCARLET FEVER AFTERMATH.

W. T. writes: My son, aged nine years, has just recovered from scarlet fever. During his illness he was too active, and he is now subject to rheumatic pains. Will these gradually disappear? Is there anything you can recommend that will drive these out of his system?

REPLY.

Put your son in good medical hands. There is more than a chance that his rheumatism is also in his heart and kidneys. All these are among the after effects of the otherwise mild disease, scarlet fever.

SCREENS FOR APARTMENTS.

Chicago, April 20.—[Legal Friend of the People.]—Is there a law compelling landlords to provide screens for windows and doors in flats or apartments? If we should hold back the rent until landlord supplies same, would we be liable to get a notice to move for failure to pay? R. F.

Sec. 2174 of the city code provides that "it shall be the duty of every * * person owning or controlling * * any place where persons are housed * * and where foods are kept * * * to maintain on all * * openings * * from April 15 to Nov. 15 * * screens * * *." While this wording is equally applicable to landlord and tenant, we are informed that if an owner fails to provide screens a complaint with the department of health will insure action to that end.

Chicago, April 20.—[Friend of the People.]—Seventy-first street is paved west to Crawford avenue, and at the end of the pavement there is a deep hole, very dangerous to motorists. There is no sign that it is the end of the pavement and no warning about the hole. A great many people make use of this road. Would it be possible to have the hole filled with cinders? M. H. Mc.

Report is made that roadway at end of pavement on 71st street, where there was a deep depression, has been filled with cinders by the Eighteenth ward forces.

UNFAILING.

Oh, Gen. Smedley Butler, you're the joy of all our lives;
You chase our griefs and cares away, just happiness survives;
This world's a dark and dreary place, or would be without you,
For you're always up to something that int'rests us anew.
We travel down this vale of tears, and all is dark, and then
We hear a noise and look to find you've broken loose again!
We get fed up on noise and jazz, our friends bore us to tears,
Depression haunts our footsteps, we're full of doubts and fears.
Then we scan our daily paper and give a joyful yell,

CHARLEY DAWES is coming home from London to attend our Jubilee of Progress with its big parade and bands and flags 'n' everything. It would be worth having the jubilee if for nothing else than to get Charley back with us again. And would it not be a good idea to have Charley at the head of the Republican ticket for President next year? With Jim Ham at the top of the Democratic ticket and Charley in first place on the Republican ticket, Chicago couldn't lose. With a fellow townsman in the White House we could say to any further sneers at former crime conditions in Chicago: "And now, doggone yuh, laff that off!"

THA DUKE GIVES THA B. AN' C. A SWELL PREZENT.

Dick: Me, the damn fool, oughta have my head examined. Fer tha past 6 weeks I been holdin out a cupple bucks a week on tha B. an' C. so's I cood buy me some new fishin tackle and other necessitys. Instead of diggin a hole in tha back yard and planting tha 12 berries, I carelessly hid it in tha short hunk of stovepipe on our range. Last Argument Sunday tha Mama uses as her opening sermon, a text entitled "Could ye, good father, across come with twelve sheckles?" Ya gotta think fast with that Mama of mine, an I answers her that if I had 12 smackers it wood give me untold joy to pass it over. Right then an there I get sarcasmed to tha effect that as she was having her tea served in tha conservatory her arm happened to brush tha stovepipe an 12 berries dropped right in her lap. That woman could locate a poppy seed in a pile of soft coal! Ennyway, on asking what she wanted tha kale for, I get informed that she's tired of tha tubs an wants a washing machine. What got me sore was that only last Xmas I gave her a bran' new washboard. Monday I got to meet her at noon and go lookin. Tha first thing tha salesman asks is whether we want a direct or a alterating current machine. I tells him a alterating an tha B. an' C. busts in with "I believe we'll look at both makes." When he tells us we cood bring in some dirty clothes an get a demonstration. I got a bright idea which was that if there's 52 dealers in tha game we cood take each week's washing to a different guy an ta hell with buying, at least for a year. Nowadays they sell you any color machine you want which is explained that you can match your surroundings. Tha only colored thing I ever noticed in our basement was tha janitor. When tha guy explains to me about tha oiling, I informed him to tell it to tha B. an' C. as I wasn't going to be tha Shoffer. It's also explained that their machine has got very sturdy legs, I then told tha goof we wanted it to wash, not hike. They insisted on a $34 down payment and I tole 'em they woodn' get any so we split tha difference an gave 'em $12 plus a buck a week. After 4 documents were each signed 5 times, tha guy said that with their machine we wood have no cause to worry, an' I wished them tha same.

FOR ANY LOVER.

Now save your breath. Love is no twice-told tale.
Only the stars are constant, only flowers
Repeat an endless loveliness nor fail
Recurrent April in his amorous hours.
Let be this cry. There is no sounding bell
To so reward your tocsin that you see
Love's hopeless armies riding down to Hell
For Helen and Iseult and Lalage.
Not whips of scorn nor ashes of desire
Can waken love or feed an ebbing flame.
There will be other lovers at that fire
To wander, two by two, the way you came,
Try to remember their eternal vow.

NANCY SHORES.

HIP, HIP, HOORAY! The war department has just heard of our army crossing the Meuse the other day. It awarded a Distinguished Service cross to William Abbott of Philadelphia for heroism on that occasion. But won't it be surprised when it finds out about the armistice? Thirteen years seems a long time, but it's been that long since our dough boys crossed the Meuse. Still, you have to hand it to the war department. It's catching up; it's certainly catching up.

FROM THE TRIBUNE'S COLUMNS

16 YEARS AGO TODAY

APRIL 27, 1915.

LONDON.—"Ypres is in flames, the Germans having thrown a hail of incendiary bombs into the town," a correspondent in northern France says. He continues: "The fighting continues hotly all along this front; the Germans show extraordinary daring in bringing heavy artillery close to their front line, the guns used being mostly 13 inch Austrian howitzers on movable carriages." Reports from Berlin and Paris conflict regarding the developments in the great battle, described by some as the most bitterly contested fight in history. The German statement says the kaiser's troops continue to advance. Opposing this, the Paris statement says that every German advance has been stopped.

PARIS.—Col. Peppino Garibaldi, who is here to conclude arrangements for sending the remainder of the Italian volunteers home, has given a remarkable interview in which he says positively that Italy will declare war on Austria on or before May 15.

LONDON.—The peace party of American women headed by Miss Jane Addams of Chicago, which has been marooned aboard the steamer Nordam at Deal since April 24, is believed to be on its way to The Hague. Orders to permit the vessel to proceed to Rotterdam were issued. Whether the United States embassy was responsible for the release of the ship has not been ascertained. A dispatch from The Hague says that discord appears to have sprung up among delegates to the women's peace congress who are already there.

APRIL 27, 1901.

PITTSBURGH, Pa.—The vote of the presbyteries of the United States has been taken on the question of revising the creed, and a majority favors revision. A committee appointed by the general assembly of the Presbyterian church has agreed upon two important features of the plan for revision which will be presented to the general assembly. These are: 1. A new statement of doctrine to be issued as a supplement to the confession of faith. 2. A revision of the confession itself, either by the addition of a declaratory paragraph or a change in the text.

NEW YORK.—The engagement of Guglielmo Marconi, the inventor of wireless telegraphy, and Miss Josephine Bowen Holman is reported.

PITTSBURGH, Pa.—Consolidation of all labor unions into one big organization of 2,000,000 men with one supreme head is the aim of labor men who held a preliminary meeting here.

CLAYTON, N. M.—Thomas E. Ketchum, alias "Black Jack," the notorious outlaw who had terrorized the people of the southwest for the last fifteen years, was hanged here this afternoon for train robbery and his head was severed from the body by the rope as if by a guillotine.

NEW YORK.—Whitelaw Reid, editor of the New York Tribune, and Miss Elizabeth Mills, daughter of D. O. Mills, formerly of San Francisco, were married at the residence of the bride's father on 5th avenue by the Rev. William F. Morgan, rector of St. Thomas' church. The ushers were Ogden Mills, brother of the bride; Clarence King, Augustus C. Jurnee, and Charles R. Hurd. About 250 persons were present, among whom were Secretary James G. Blaine, Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Howells, Congressman Levi P. Morton, Cornelius J. Vanderbilt, Mr. and Mrs. Abram L. Hewitt, ex-Mayor Wickham, Postmaster General James and wife, Gov. and Mrs. McClellan, and John L. Cadwallader.

LONDON.—The funeral of Lord Beaconsfield took place today and the body was deposited in the family vault at Hughenden by the side of that of the late Countess of Beaconsfield. A large number of distinguished persons, including the prince of Wales, the duke of Connaught, Prince Leopold, the duke of Richmond, the marquis of Hartington, and the marquis of Hamilton, were present. Queen Victoria sent a floral tribute. The most remarkable incident in connection with the burial was Mr. Gladstone's conspicuous absence.

CHICAGO.—Miss Anna Sidwell, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. L. Sidwell, and Charles F. Stewart were married at the Michigan Avenue Methodist Episcopal church by the Rev. George A. Van Horne.

THE FORT DEARBORN MASSACRE.

Chicago, April 22.—Who prepared the radio program on the Fort Dearborn massacre that was given over W-G-N? How long is the intelligence of those at all informed on the Fort Dearborn evacuation and massacre to be brazenly insulted by having the maliciously perverted Kinzie version of those events dished out to them and the public? Was the Chicago Historical society consulted in the preparation of this program? If so, who was the eminent consultant?

Wonder why those who prepared this radio program did not take the trouble to read "Chicago and the Old Northwest," by Milo Quaife? Dr. Quaife has shown why the story of the heroism of Mrs. Helm and her romantic rescue cannot be considered as credible. Mrs. Heald, and not Mrs. Helm, was unquestionably the outstanding heroine of the Fort Dearborn massacre, yet Chicago, to its shame, has never paid any honor to the memory of Mrs. Heald, but has made a heroine of Mrs. Helm, who was not in any special danger at any time, being in full sympathy with the British and the Indians.

Capt. Heald was not only a very brave but an exceptionally capable officer; he died prematurely from the effects of a severe wound received in the Fort Dearborn battle. As a duty to the memory of Capt. Nathan Heald, whose record at Fort Dearborn was thoroughly honorable and capable in every way, I hereby make an indignant protest against the many malicious lies embodied in the Kinzie caricature of this noble, judicious and heroic commandant of Fort Dearborn at the time of the Fort Dearborn battle and massacre. ERNEST BRADSHAW.

STREET CAR LIGHTS.

Chicago, April 24.—About a year ago the street cars had big signs in the center of their cars telling car riders of the improvement of their lighting system, and if at any time the light was not on when needed, to ask the conductor for it. Evidently the conductor hasn't had orders to this effect, as he doesn't put them on when asked to do so. The cars I have reference to are the Wells-Downtown, the No. 3, the Clybourn avenue cars, and the Fullerton avenue cars. The "L" has light in all its cars in the rush hours, and even when it isn't so necessary as when one is riding under the "L" road, and no chance to read, except at each corner, for one second. J. F. MILLER.

THE BUILDER OF NAVY PIER.

Chicago, April 23.—Navy pier was one of the main objectives of Mayor Carter H. Harrison, was built during his term of office, and a plate bearing the name of Carter H. Harrison, mayor of Chicago, was placed thereon. Perhaps a few buckets of mortar or cement were added after William Hale Thompson assumed office. Why should this cause the name plate of Carter H. Harrison, who was the originator of the idea and made it possible to erect and complete this gigantic undertaking, to be replaced by a name plate reading "William Hale Thompson, Mayor of Chicago"?

EDWARD J. CAGNEY.

THE JUBILEE.

Chicago, April 21.—Bring the Jubilee week to every citizen. Have flags displayed everywhere. Have every one wear some kind of a badge, such maybe as "Welcome Visitor." Give every one a part to do. Perhaps Old Man Prosperity would get over his sulking in his tent, come out, and join the Jubilee. G. G. WILSON.

PROTEST FROM THE DRYS.

Barrington, Ill., April 22.—In THE TRIBUNE of April 22d is an editorial entitled "Dry Trickery in Illinois," in the course of which the following references are made to senate bill No. 34, which passed the senate April 15:

"From all indications it is traceable to the rural drys of the state who think to do Mr. Hoover a good turn by preventing a primary vote on Republican candidates before the convention. . . . The presidential primaries will permit majorities to elect and instruct delegates to the Republican national convention. To prevent that the drys would repeal the law which permits it. An evidence of this policy of repression and coercion increase, the state will better understand the temper of the prohibition squirearchy. Its morality is that of crooked gambling."

As a matter of fact, the bill was introduced by Senator Victor P. Michel of Peoria, one of the wettest of the wet senators. In the debate on the McDermott-O'Grady repeal bill Senator Michel acted as the wet leader in the senate. The drys of the state are perfectly willing to be charged with everything for which they are in any way responsible, but very naturally would prefer to let the wets carry their own responsibilities.

CHICAGO IN DENTISTRY.

Chicago, April 21.—Permit me to compliment you on your excellent editorial in SUNDAY'S TRIBUNE relative to an inventory for Chicago. May I point out to you that while a comprehensive review was given of the various material, spiritual, and educational facilities of Chicago, no mention was made of the fact that we have three important dental schools right here in town, two of which are world famous? It is safe to say that Chicago, without question, is the dental center of the world.

I believe this is a fact that deserves wider recognition, both for its importance as an asset to the community and also for the favorable effect it undoubtedly has upon the health of our population.

THE ISSUE IN WAUKEGAN.

Waukegan, Ill., April 22.—Your election news this morning states that the Democratic candidate for mayor of Waukegan made effective material of the fact that Gov. Emmerson vetoed the prohibition repealer. That statement is misleading. The wet issue was not in it. The issue was communism, and it is only just to the people of Waukegan, and particularly to Republicans, that it should be clearly understood the issue was communism, which lost. PAUL D. MAY.

CABBAGES AND KINGS.

Chicago, April 20.—Walking down North Clark street I noticed one of our policemen arguing most violently with a none too prosperous green grocer. It seems that the merchant had placed a few of his wares on the sidewalk in front of his shop, down at the curb's end. The stuff, as placed there, seemed not at all to impede anyone's passing.

Almost next door to the grocer's a large garage had three second hand cars standing on the sidewalk tagged "for sale." These automobiles occupied four or five times as much space as the storekeeper's few baskets of cabbage, but this apparent "flagrant violation" was not noticed by the officer as he daily passed the garage.

HEAD OF SPANISH REPUBLIC VISITS CATALONIA CHIEF

Barcelona Gives Zamora Wild Ovation.

BARCELONA, April 26.—(AP)—Niceto Alcala Zamora, making his first good will trip since he became provisional president of the Spanish republic, was given a loud and enthusiastic ovation on his arrival here for a one day visit today. Great political significance is attached to his visit.

COL. FRANCISCO MACIA. [Acme photo.]

Despite official statements that President Zamora came principally to witness the Irish-Spanish football game, political observers believe the main object of the trip involved the political relationship between the Madrid government and the Catalonoian province, of which Barcelona is the capital.

Unfurl Republican Flags.

New republican flags were unfurled on all sides and the streets echoed with "vivas" for the republic, Catalonia, and Zamora. Alcala was embraced by Col. Francisco Macia, Catalonian generality president, and they exchanged well wishes. Together they drove slowly through the shouting crowds to the Barcelona palace.

It is believed Alcala and Macia will devote much time to secret conferences about differences growing out of Col. Macia's establishment of a Catalonian republic. Negotiations over this have led to Macia's province coming temporarily into the Spanish federation until parliament discusses the future political status of Catalonia.

Crowd Beats "Assassin."

A man who was afraid his pocketbook would be stolen and reached toward his hip pocket to safeguard it was beaten by a crowd, which thought he was attempting to assassinate President Zamora.

As the president's car approached the crowded San Jaime plaza the unidentified man, who was believed to be a German, made the false move. Police rescued him and took him to headquarters. He was released after he explained his action and no weapons were found.

RUSSIANS' PLAN TO COMMUNIZE U. S. IN 20 YEARS REVEALED

New York, April 26.—(AP)—The Russian people are tired of propaganda and may rise against it soon, Clarence Warren, an engineer for the Allis-Chalmers company of Milwaukee, said today after his return from Russia, where he spent a year directing construction of mills.

Warren asserted the Russians were hoarding gold and would do almost anything to get it. "Banks will give 196 rubles for $100," he said, "but bootleggers will give as high as 1,600 rubles for the same money."

He said Russia was training the women to do all the work possible so the men would be ready for war.

He said the Russians expect the communist system to be adopted in China and India within three years, in England and the European continent in 14 years, and in the United States in 20 years.

"No part of machinery made in Russia can be duplicated," he said. "The Russians have no standards and cannot make two parts alike. So long as this is the condition, the nation will have to rely upon the United States and Europe."

HIGH TARIFF WALL PUTS BUSINESS ON SKIDS IN MEXICO

Government Loses 20% of Income.

BY JOHN CORNYN.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

MEXICO CITY, April 26.—The campaign for nationalization of the activities of the Mexican nation, which, it was expected, would redound to the benefit of all classes, has proved a boomerang, for the government at least.

Since the first of the year the income from customs duties has decreased to such an extent that the government is hard put to meet expenses. During the first three months of the present year the customs produced $7,500,000 less than for the same period last year, and the income in March was considerably less than that for January. The chances are, observers say, that the total decrease for the year will be more than $30,000,000.

Loses 20 Per Cent of Income.

As the international customs produced only $55,500,000 last year, the government stands face to face with a deficit here of at least 50 per cent. With a total income of less than $150,000,000 and an elaborate program of reconstruction, this loss of 20 per cent of its total income is deeply felt.

Already a reaction has set in against what many call the "ill considered nationalization program," which discourages the importation of foreign goods and places a heavy tax on all imports that can be construed as being luxuries or that ought to be manufactured in Mexico.

The fall in the value of the silver peso and the consequent rise of 5c per cent in the prices of most foreign imports and from 60 to 75 per cent in those which were heavily taxed in the interest of the nationalist program have led to the practical cessation of importations in these lines.

May Reconsider Program.

President Ortiz Rubio's communication to the permanent commission of congress on April 17, notifying that body to call a special session of congress to consider, among other things, the national crisis, is taken in official and congressional circles to be an invitation to reconsider the nationalization movement.

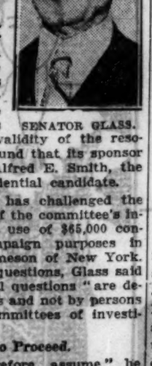
Yet it is not easy to back-track in this matter, for the free entry of foreign goods, if permitted, will, it is predicted, inevitably bring with it a still greater decline in the value of the silver peso because of the heavier bills for merchandise purchased abroad especially in the United States.

Many of the larger stores here, which handle a great percentage of American goods, have placed no new orders in the United States since the decree heavily taxing foreign imports was promulgated toward the end of last year.

GLASS ASSAILS BISHOP CANNON IN FUNDS CASE

Says Committee Has Right to Investigate.

Washington, D. C., April 26.—(AP)—Senator Glass today assailed Bishop James Cannon Jr. of the Methodist Episcopal church, south, for challenging the authority of the senate campaign funds committee to investigate his anti-Smith expenditures in 1928.



SENATOR GLASS.

The Virginia Democrat, author of the resolution under which the committee is making the inquiry, said the churchman was questioning the validity of the resolution on the ground that its sponsor supported Gov. Alfred E. Smith, the Democratic presidential candidate.

Bishop Cannon has challenged the constitutionality of the committee's investigation of his use of $65,000 contributed for campaign purposes in 1928 by E. C. Jameson of New York.

In response to questions, Glass said such constitutional questions "are decided by the courts and not by persons accused or by committees of investigation."

Wants to Proceed.

"I would, therefore, assume," he said, "that the senate committee now engaged in investigating campaign expenditures will, without a moment's hesitation, proceed under the mandate of the senate and not be deterred by technical objections from any person who may find himself within the scope of the senate resolution."

"Bishop Cannon may be interested to know," Glass said, "that the Republican senator who did ten times more than any other to elect Hoover and defeat Smith thoroughly approved the resolution to investigate Cannon's expenditures, before it was offered, even going to the extent of expressing his willingness to offer it."

Senator Glass did not name the senator, but presumably he was referring to Senator Borah [Rep., Idaho].

Senator Glass said that so far as he knew every Republican, as well as every Democratic senator, voted for the resolution.

Both Parties Concerned.

"The Republican party, as much as the Democratic party," he added, "should be concerned for the integrity of campaign contributions. If such contributions are to be stolen and such theft is to go unpunished under existing law, the law should be changed; otherwise sensible persons will refrain from making future contributions to campaign funds."

The Virginia senator said the fact that a Smith supporter introduced the resolution, as Cannon pointed out recently, was immaterial.

"The Nye committee," he added, "is not charged with the duty of considering the paternity of the senate resolution; but it is empowered to investigate any charge made by responsible persons to the effect that Bishop Cannon, or anybody else, deliberately violated the federal corrupt practices act, or embezzled campaign funds intrusted to him by diverting them to private uses. That is all there is to it."

50 Short Weight Suits Started by Sealer Grein

More than 50 shopkeepers have been made defendants in suits charging short weights or short measure since Joe Grein took office as city sealer in Mayor Cermak's cabinet two weeks ago and launched a campaign against unfair merchants. During the weekend, City Sealer Grein rounded up five ice dealers whom his inspectors found were using short weight scales in dispensing their product. The scales were confiscated for evidence.

Milk ..changed their gloom to happiness

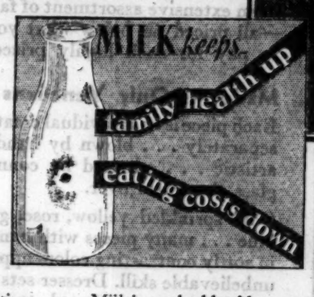
Every family has times when expenses simply have to be cut

Using more milk helped this family to live actually better at less cost



IT'S an occasion for real joy, when you can look back at a period of reduced family income and say "Thank goodness, we all kept well." Then you can know that you did a real job of feeding the family.

—And that is just the happy position in which so many, many mothers find themselves at the present time. Knowing that food costs had to be cut, they lived on what was available, and did a splendid job of it.

It was just about a year ago when we urged those compelled to cut down on the food budget, to make the first essential in the food budget, a quart of milk a day for every member of the family.

Milk is a complete food, containing vitamins, minerals, proteins, butter fat and milk sugar—practically all the elements needed to build and maintain bones, teeth and muscles.

With a quart of milk daily, children are assured of the nourishment that means so much to them at the time they are building bones and growing teeth: and the health of grown-ups is not allowed to slip because daily repair needs are neglected.

Milk is a valuable aid to every meal. It makes the breakfast Postum or cocoa more tasty and nourishing. For lunch, bread or crackers and milk makes a balanced meal that's quick and inexpensive for the young, and young in spirit. Milk soups are sustaining; vegetables prepared with milk taste better and are better. Creamed codfish and chipped beef . . . rice, tapioca and bread puddings, are thoroughly enjoyed dishes, using milk.

Remember, the food bill goes down and the family health goes up when a quart of milk is used for each member of the family, daily. Borden's milk costs 13 cents a quart, delivered at your door. Why not have the convenience of regular milk delivery each day? Speak to your neighborhood Borden milkman, or phone Franklin 3107.

To Make Milk Drinking More Than Ever Delightful

. . . Borden's have a special drinking milk—called "Selected" — famous for its "Sweet Natural Taste" and enjoyed in more and more homes each year.

"Selected" Milk is produced on 105 picked farms near Lake Geneva, Wisconsin. We pay the farmers a liberal premium to maintain model dairy farms and give extra care to the stabling, feeding, grooming, milking of the healthy cows and the efficient cooling of the milk.

Every glass of "Selected" is a real treat. It has solved the milk drinking problem in many a family. Children drink eagerly their quart a day. Milk drinkers of all ages love "Selected." It costs only 16 cents a quart. Make a week's trial of "Selected." Speak to your neighborhood Borden's milkman or phone Franklin 3107.

4 MEN AND BABY PERISH ON DESERT ISLE IN MIDOCEAN

Survivor Tells Horrors of Slow Starvation.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

MARSEILLES, April 26.—For the first time in three years Le Merdy Herdelan, 19 year old Breton sailor, is looking on civilization after spending that time on a desert volcanic isle in the Indian ocean, a year of which was passed in slow starvation while four of his comrades and a new-born baby died.

As he sat and sipped a glass of cider, he looked about and his eyes were heavy with sorrow while he recalled the experience. He was reluctant to talk of his part in the tragedy and submitted reticently to questioning.

How Adventure Started.

Three years ago, he said, a Parisian fish canning company sent out a party of Breton fishermen to catch crawfish that swarmed in the Indian ocean near St. Paul, a tiny island between the Cape and Australia. Huts were put up and canning machinery installed. Work started.

Many crawfish were caught and canned. But the business did not pay; transport costs were high, and the island was far from the oceanic traffic lanes and a market. So the company withdrew and most of the Bretons were taken home to resume their fishing in the English channel and off the Newfoundland banks.

All but seven, who stayed to take care of the machinery and carry on the fishery until they should be relieved, departed. Then disaster came. Food did not come from France. A large part of the provisions were destroyed by a fire, which razed some of the huts.

Four Men Die.

"There were rabbits, and there were crawfish—plenty of them, God knows—but we had no vegetables and our men sickened from scurvy and four of them died," Herdelan said. "As for water, we had nothing but a sulphurous brook running from a crater. Not one of us knew much about working a water still."

Pulloch, a sailor from Brittany, was the first to go. He was buried in the sands. The tiny colony, alone in the midst of the ocean, deprived of everything that makes civilization what it is today, awaited its fate.

The bravest of the brave, according to young Herdelan, was a Negro known only as François. Every day he hunted for rabbits and fished the perilous waters. At last he fell sick and crawled off to a lonely rock to die.

"I don't want to bother you folks with my death," he said.

Sharks Fight for Body.

Scurvy claimed another victim named Conq. Last of the ill-fated four was Quillezic, a Breton. He stood the gaff until he could last no longer and then went fishing. Sharks fought for his bones after he upset his boat.

Only three remained to watch their mad go. They were Mme. Brenon, Herdelan, and another Breton named Huledut. At last the rescue ship St. Louis came with provisions and the trio of the tragic epic was started home.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

TOKIO, April 26.—The long standing Russo-Japanese fisheries dispute was amicably settled this morning through the receipt of a cable from Moscow fixing the rate of the ruble at 32½ yen, or about 15 cents, which is an even compromise for both sides. Within the boundaries of Russia the soviet government holds the ruble at 49 cents, par value. It is sold in the "black exchange" in Riga, Latvia, in Berlin, Vladivostok, and other points for as low as 6 cents. Because Japanese fishing interests paid Russians with rubles bought outside of Russia the soviet government demanded that they be paid in Japanese yen for fishing privileges and licenses.

Now Whiten Teeth a Shade a Day

Do This to Remove Yellow and Stain, Prevent Decay—Teeth Whiten 3 Shades in 3 Days—Breath is Sweet

HERE'S a new and utterly different technique—recently perfected—that removes the real cause of stain, ugly yellow, decay and gum diseases—and makes it easily possible to whiten teeth a shade a day—3 shades whiter in 3 days.

Just do this: Morning and night, give teeth and gums a Kolynos ANTISEPTIC FOAM BATH with a half-inch of Kolynos on a dry brush.

Then note the day-to-day improvement. Very soon teeth look cleaner and whiter than in years. Gums feel firmer and look healthier. The mouth and breath are sweet and fresh. Here's the reason:

Kolynos is unique. It succeeds where ordinary preparations fail because it becomes an antiseptic foam the very moment it enters the mouth. This foam gets into and cleans out every pit, fissure and crevice. It kills the millions of germs that swarm into the mouth with every breath, defy ordinary toothpastes and cause 95% of all tooth and gum troubles—190 million are killed in the first 15 seconds.

Gently this exhilarating, antiseptic foam bathes the teeth and gums—erases tartar and the mucoid coating—stimulates the gums—purifies the oral cavity—CLEANS TEETH AS THEY SHOULD BE CLEANED, RIGHT DOWN TO THE BEAUTIFUL, NAKED WHITE ENAMEL WITHOUT INJURY!

Thus stain and ugly yellow are removed. Decay is prevented. Teeth are kept sound and gleaming white. And gums are safeguarded against insidious disease.

Try the Kolynos Dry-Brush Technique. Start giving teeth and gums a Kolynos ANTISEPTIC FOAM BATH morning and night. You'll be glad you did. Teeth will be whiter than ever. Gums firmer and healthier. The mouth tingling with a clean, fresh taste. Buy a tube of Kolynos.

A CLEAR COMPLEXION

Ruddy cheeks—sparkling eyes—most women can have. Dr. F. M. Edwards for 20 years treated scores of women for liver and bowel ailments. During those years he gave his patients a substitute for calomel made of a few well known vegetable ingredients, naming them Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets. Know them by their olive color.

These tablets are wonder-workers on the liver and bowels, causing a normal action, carrying off the waste and poisonous matter in one's system.

If you have a pale face, sallow look, dull eyes, pimples, coated tongue, headache, a listless, no-good feeling, all out of sorts, inactive bowels, take one of Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets nightly for a time and note the pleasing results. Thousands of women and men take Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets—now and then to keep fit. 15c, 30c, and 60c.

RUSSIAN TIMBER CAMP ENOUGH TO DRIVE ONE INSANE

BY HENRY WALES.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

MOSCOW, April 5.—[By Mail.]—Privacy, just one moment of being alone by yourself and away from every one else, is what you crave after passing any period of time among the sawmill hands or the forest timber cutters in their state operated communities up in the Archangel district, close to the arctic circle.

In the week I was out in the forest regions visiting cutting camps, loading stations, and other units I nearly went insane. Even if you happen to be alone in a room you know people in the next one can see you through chinks in the big slabs making the wall or through the uncurtained windows.

You know that in these speak-easy houses occupants of the next room can hear your very breathing, and there is no such thing as knocking on a door. You just slam it open and walk in.

People Are Taciturn.

The workers do their jobs in crews, sleep in bunkhouses, eat in mess halls, and lounge about off shift in their dormitories or in the hallways, alongside the big stove where the women are cooking and cleaning up continually.

Married couples and families have scarcely any more sanctity, although one does at least knock before entering their one room "homes." In the deathly silence of night in the forest one can hear every word spoken, every movement through the thin walls, and catch glimpses of the occupants through the spaces between the uneven boards forming the walls.

They are taciturn, these northland people, not given to much conversation, and pass hours and hours, sitting or lolling about, smoking an occasional cigaret, meditating.

How They Spend Time Off.

A favorite pastime in the forest is to go down to the tractor station and watch the mechanics and chauffeurs tinkering with their caterpillar machines. The observers seldom ask questions, seldom get an answer if they do, but seem to get a big kick out of standing and watching.

"I usually go down and watch the tractors on my day off," one man said. "I've done that all winter and I know a good deal about the machinery and the motor now. Maybe next year I will be able to drive a tractor myself."

They all took a lot of interest in my aero sled, although they had seen these vehicles before. They examined the motor, the propeller, the little cabin, the fuselage, the controls and the instrument board and, in fact, the whole mechanism.

Tractors used for hauling log sledges over the ice roads are Russian, made at the Kharkoff plant, and operate on kerosene.

American Tractors Too Light.

"These machines are 50 and 37 horse power models," the foreman of the tractor station said. "Last year we used American machines, but they were too light, not heavy enough for this traffic. We had to transfer them to another station farther south.

"The Caterpillar company makes a machine that is heavy enough, but it won't run on kerosene. It must have benzine, so we can't use it, as we can't always get gasoline or benzine here. The radiators on the Communar [domestic] machine are too small and the new types will be larger and have certain improvements which we are adopting from the German models.

"The Communar machine made at Kharkoff is adapted principally from the McCormick model, but we have combined certain features found in other American makes. You know, we don't have to worry about patent rights, as we don't recognize them, and incorporate any features we see which we want."

Won't Use Modern Tools.

I asked the superintendent of the cutting station on the Pinega river why the heavy, unwieldy, wide bladed Russian ax and wide Russian saw are still used, despite the fact the Norwegian tools, made according to American models, narrow axes and ribbon type saws, are admittedly better.

"We can't get the workers to adopt the other style," he said. "They have been accustomed to work with their native tools for so many years they don't want to change. As a matter of efficiency, I don't think the weight of our tools matters much. A Russian peasant doesn't seem to care about an extra pound or two of weight. However, the steel used in our axes and saws is not nearly so good as in the foreign tools, and that's the main thing. The Norwegian ax and saw holds its edge and teeth four or five times longers than ours."

Refuse to Follow Advice.

I talked with the Norwegians—they nearly all spoke German, and two knew a little English—and they expressed doubt as to whether the Russians would ever adopt their system of labor. They expressed amazement at the production the native workers got from their obsolete tools and inefficient methods and put it down at just brute strength and stamina.

"We try to show them the scientific way of opening up the forest methodically and cleanly from the road so as to enable the logs to be gotten out to transport more easily and rapidly," the foreman of a Norwegian crew explained. "But they don't follow our advice. They fell the trees every which way, so they crisscross each other, and they spend more time floundering around in the deep snow to tackle each job than they do in actual working.

"Nevertheless, they do manage to get out an awful lot of timber, much more than we could if we worked the same way they do without planning and estimating carefully on each tree."

No Propaganda for Norwegians.

I visited the camp of the Norwegians. There are 35 here now and 50 more will come in next autumn. There was considerable red bunting and cheesecloth and communist propaganda draped around the huts, with photographs of Lenin and Stalin and Kalinin.

"All that was put up before we moved in," one of the Norsemen remarked. "No, they don't try to put over any propaganda on us. In fact, they don't come around us very much, as only one of our men speaks Russian and none of the Russians speaks Norwegian. We get the same food rations as they, but we have some things sent in to us by special arrangement with the timber trust and we serve butter with meals. They send us up a barrel of it every so often."

Praises Canadian Methods.

One of the Norwegians who spoke English had worked in Canada once for a short spell. He was enthusiastic about methods of work there.

"They are as far ahead of Norway in handling timber as we are ahead of Russia," he declared. "And the way the lumberjacks live in those Canadian camps, like the Ritz, with meat three times a day. Even for breakfast we had beefsteak at the camp I worked, the Ontario Paper company.

"I don't see how the Russians can work efficiently in all the baggy clothing they wear. I should think it would impede their movements too much. Why, in Canada we worked in red flannel shirts and breeches and leather boots. Here the natives work in a couple of ragged coats, quilted and thick and baggy, and those clumsy boots. It takes the leader of their brigades five minutes to fish around in his various pockets to find his pencil and mark his tree once he has felled it."

Women Are Efficient.

"The women are more efficient, generally, than the men, and don't seem to mind the cold, no matter how bad it gets," said the Norwegian foreman. "They don't do the heaviest work, the loading and dragging out logs from the forest, but they do a lot of sawing and chopping and trimming and cleaning and barking. There was one girl in a brigade working next to ours last week who actually used to powder her nose, and even had a lipstick."

16 CONVICTED KULAKS WIN NEW TRIAL BY ORDER OF HIGH COURT

MOSCOW, April 26.—(AP)—Sixteen kulaks, or rich peasants, recently convicted of counter revolutionary activities, six of whom were sentenced to death, today were granted a new trial by the supreme court. It was held the sentences were too severe and were unmerited by the testimony.

In ordering the new trial the high court reminded the trial judges of instructions, which have been repeatedly issued, that kulaks must not be sentenced to be shot or to long imprisonment except for crimes of extraordinary political seriousness.

Although the campaign for extermination of the kulak class is approved by authorities, they are unwilling the rich peasants should be persecuted or given unnecessarily severe terms in jail.

Pershing Tells How America Acted in War

He Stresses Long, Costly Delays.

BY FANNY BUTCHER.

"MY EXPERIENCES IN THE WORLD WAR," by John J. Pershing, commander in chief, American expeditionary forces, finally reaches an avid public this morning in two large volumes published by Stokes. The world has waited, not without impatience, for Gen. Pershing's memoirs. It is rewarded today with a document written with a purpose. That purpose Gen. Pershing states without equivocation in his foreword.

GEN. JOHN J. PERSHING. [New York Times drawing.]

"My primary purpose in writing this story of the American expeditionary forces in France," he says, "is to render what I conceive to be an important service to my country. In that adventure there were many lessons useful to the America npeople, should they ever again be called to arms, and I felt it a duty to record them as I saw them." . . .

"The world war found us absorbed in the pursuits of peace and quite unconscious of probable threat to our security. We would listen to no warnings of danger. We had made small preparation for defense and none for aggression. So when war came actually upon us we had to change the very habits of our lives and minds to meet its realities. The slow processes by which we achieved these changes and applied our latent power to the problems of combat in Europe, despite our will, our numbers and our wealth, I endeavor to describe. Therein lie the lessons of which I write."

These lessons fill almost three-fourths of the two volumes. The pages are one long succession of impatient waitings on the part of the commander in chief for troops, for supplies, for equipment, for everything that would make it possible for him to put an army into the field. About half of the two volumes is concerned in one way or another with his determination to preserve the as yet incomplete A. E. F. as a national army against what must have been a constant battering from both the British and French to confuse him that troops should be used as part of their respective armies and not held, or even trained, until they could operate as a unit. A previously unified force would have made that political battle easier to win, at least.

Gen. Pershing speaks guardedly and with diplomacy about those attacks, but their bitterness and their presence in every conversation and every council which he had with any of the allies, and, even for a time, with his own chief of staff, are to be read plainly between the gentlemanly lines.

By this time there is little startling in the two volumes. Despite the fact that only half of the material was used socially, all of the spectacular bits already are public property. Every one, I imagine, was surprised not to find more of "Fighting Jack" in it, for rumors have been floating about for some years that when Pershing did write his memoirs they would be fiery. "My Experiences in the World War" is as sedate and as calm an example of recording historical data as any one of the principals in the great drama of the great war has given the world. Official documents, letters which passed between him and the secretary of war, occasional conversations which he had with the allied leaders, extracts from his diary which is peculiarly sketchy as a record), his own comments on his own and other peoples's actions all are in the same tone—of official information, uninspired by any personal reaction. "My Experiences in the World War" is as impersonal as if it were written by an outsider who put into the mouth of the commander in chief of the A. E. F. only those words which such an important historical character should utter.

Of the historical importance of the book there is no question. They are source material. They are the last of the great records of the participants in the struggle. They round out the picture.

The top edge of my copies of the two volumes bristle with papers marking pages from which I long to quote. But a few of them are allowed me, however. They are mostly statements which intrigued me. As for instance, in discussing our neutrality: "It is not improbable that if we had been thus (that is, previously) prepared, our rights would have been respected and we would not have been forced into war."

He lays a ghost in this paragraph: "It was on this occasion and upon this spot that utterance was given to an expression that could have been born only of inspiration, one that will live long in history—'La Fayette, we are here!' Many have attributed this striking utterance to me and I have often wished that it could have been mine. But I have no recollection of saying anything so splendid. I am sure that those words were spoken by Col. Stanton."

Only once in the very calm record of his adamantine struggle to keep his army from being lost as a unit does he become bitter. Then he says, in discussing M. André Tardieu's comment on the staff and the organization, "I intimated that we had had quite enough of this sort of thing from the French, either military or civilian, and suggested that if his people would cease troubling themselves so much about our affairs and attend more strictly to their own we should all get along better."

Americans need no longer wonder what the commander in chief of their forces during the great war thought about the armistice. In a memorandum to the Allied Supreme War council he wrote on Oct. 30, 1918: "Finally, I believe the complete victory can only be obtained by continuing the war until we force unconditional surrender from Germany," and in ending that chapter of the book he says, "If unconditional surrender had been demanded the Germans would, without doubt, have been compelled to yield and their troops would have been returned to Germany without arms, virtually as paroled prisoners of war. The surrender of the German armies would have been an advantage to the allies in the enforcement of peace terms and would have been a greater deterrent against possible future German aggression." And that statement, for the very politic author of "My Experiences in the World War," has implications.

Gen. Pershing's record is one of the great historical documents of our generation, however, not at all a vision into the next.

Good morning!

Have you ever liked Gloria Swanson? Have you NEVER liked her? No matter! You'll fall hard for her in "Indiscreet."

This is a gay comedy drama. It is mannerly and clever and offers its star opportunity—of which she takes the greatest advantage—to prove herself an intuitive and distinguished comedienne.

Miss Swanson handles her rôle with delicacy and unfailing humor. She lays stress where stress is needed, and she never overplays. The bathing girl, who became a clothes horse and who married a marquis, has developed into a fascinating complex woman and an adept actress, who still has the "pull" that focused eyes on the bathing girl and the clothes horse.

Miss Swanson plays a sophisticated young woman who finds herself called upon to save her adored sister from a man whom she [Jerry] has once been—indiscreet. At the time of Joan's infatuation Jerry is engaged to Tony Blake, an author, whom she adores and who is batty about her. Together Jerry and Tony are complete nuts. They have the most wonderful time obeying impulses—but let the picture tell you about that. If you ever longed to trip up a waiter with a trayful of dishes—and did!—you'll have some idea of their assorted activities when cruising about en pair.

The saving of sister brings about numerous entertaining situations.

Mr. Lyon, who grows better and better with each release, is Al in the romantic lead. Monroe Owsley plays a cad as Monroe knows how. Maude Eburne—almost as expert at making faces as Edna Mae Oliver—is swell as Aunt Kate. Barbara Kent is cunning as Sister Joan. 'Smatter of fact, I liked everybody but Arthur Lake, who IS such an ass. It always seems so stupid to cast him as a rival for a girl's affections with ANY adult male. He looks fourteen and acts about four.

"Indiscreet" has been smartly directed. The action speeds along, spinning laughs as it moves. Lines are bright and the piece is superbly staged and costumed.

QUALITY: Fair.
DIRECTION: Ditto.
PHOTOGRAPHY: Excellent.
ACTING: Broad. The players are adept ones with, in my opinion, the exception of the star. El Brendel is NOT funny to me. He doubles in this piece and you contemplate him as a silly Swede and a desperate gangster. If he makes you laugh in either impersonation—great!
STORY: A toy salesman, Lemon, who is the spit'n' image of one McGee, gangster, runs into a mob of strange events. A rival gang planning to bump off McGee—picks on Lemon—and so on.
AUDIENCE APPEAL: You answer.

BY EDWARD MOORE.

Josef Hofmann does not take recital appearances with the frequency of former years, but his program at the Studebaker yesterday afternoon showed that he keeps up just as much enthusiasm when he finally consents to play. He is still a virtuoso of a kind to make a mechanical player fold up its machinery in abashment, and he still imagines a dream of beauty into everything that he plays.

Not that he plays everything. He has seldom shown much interest in the modern school. Brahms would seem to be the most recent, historically considered, of his approved composers, and even Brahms was not represented yesterday. It was all Beethoven, Chopin, and Liszt.

But of these he maintains an astonishing répertoire. There are pianists who play Beethoven's opus 111 every now and then, but apparently Mr. Hofmann and Moriz Rosenthal are about the only ones left who play Liszt's "Don Juan" Fantasy. For that matter, Chopin's Andante Spianato and Polonaise is none too often heard. It is, of course, little more than a display piece, with every kind of fireworks loaded into it that Chopin could invent, and Mr. Hofmann played it with amazing speed and glitter.

The Chopin Fantasy in F minor was something else. This was a glimpse at the greater Chopin, to whom Mr. Hofmann measured up musically as in the other piece he did gymnastically. He has an astounding gift for emphasizing details. In another pianist such a practice might easily become mannerism, but somehow with him it all becomes proportioned, dramatic, and lovely.

Joseph Rosenstein, a greatly gifted young violinist, appeared in a recital at Orchestra hall yesterday afternoon. It was a fully adult program, Tartini, Bach, Paganini, Lalo, and some shorter pieces, and Mr. Rosenstein played it with great charm. He has not yet developed the authoritative, incisive "bite" to his violin tone, but he would seem to have everything else, beauty of tone, accurate intonation, high speed when demanded, and the mind of a musician in matters of interpretation.

Meanwhile the Illinois Club of Catholic Women's chorus, gayly attired in Greek costumes, was singing heartily and pleasantly at the Illinois theater under the direction of Arthur Becker. Part songs, grave and gay, took up the greater part of the program. The assisting artists were two, Eusebio Concialdi, a baritone of fine voice and excellent accomplishments, and Joan Arthur, soprano, who was not altogether well advised to begin her part of the program with "I Know that My Redeemer Liveth," from "The Messiah."

U. of Illinois Installs President on Friday.

Urbana, Ill., April 26.—[Special.]—Representatives of 150 educational institutions throughout the country, Illinois state officials, and University of Illinois trustees, alumni and students will witness the formal inauguration of Dr. Harry Woodburn Chase into the presidency of the University of Illinois here next Friday.

DR. H. W. CHASE. [Acme Photo.]

Dr. Chase, formerly president of the University of North Carolina, assumed the acting presidency of the university last July.

Registration of delegates will open the inaugural program at 9 o'clock Friday. The visitors, university senate, alumni and president's party will assemble in the library, and the procession, escorted by the first regimental band of the university, will march to the men's gymnasium, where inauguration ceremonies will be held.

George A. Barr, Joliet, president of the board of trustees, will preside over the assemblage as the ceremonies officially open at 10:30 o'clock. The university concert band will play and a short invocation will precede the introductory address by Mr. Barr. Following the introduction Dr. Chase will present his installation address.

Greetings to the new president will then follow. Gov. Louis L. Emmerson will represent the state of Illinois; Samuel Wesley Stratton, chairman of the corporation of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, will speak for the university world; President Edwin Anderson Alderman, of the University of Virginia, for state universities, and President Charles Henry Rammelkamp of Illinois college, for schools in the state of Illinois.

Frank H. McKelvey, Springfield, president of the alumni association, will greet the new president as representative of the alumni. Student greetings will be extended by V. L. Kretschmer, Elgin, president of the student council. Prof. J. W. Garner, head of the department of political science, will present greetings from the faculty.

Music, the conferring of honorary degrees, and a benediction will follow. A luncheon by the board of trustees to delegates and speakers will be held at one o'clock in the woman's building. From three until five o'clock in the afternoon visitors will tour the campus. The program will close at 9 o'clock at night when President Chase and Mrs. Chase will hold a reception.

Friday has been declared a holiday for university classes.

THE STAGE

"THE FIRST MRS. FRASER."

THE CAST.

James Fraser.....A. E. Matthews
Janet Fraser.....Grace George

Murdo Fraser.....Lowell Gilmore
Alice Fraser.....May Marshall
Elsie Fraser.....Phyllis Elgar

BY CHARLES COLLINS.

MY advice to any organization which seeks to improve the drama and to acquire a long list of faithful customers eager to sign subscription blanks on the dotted line is to get a play by St. John [pronounced Sinjin] Ervine of Dublin, London, and New York. This Mr. Ervine is not the greatest dramatist of the English speaking stage by a long shot, but as a midwife to theatrical improvement associations he is a champion. He is an absolute guarantee that the child of their zeal will live and prosper.

All of which is apropos of the return of "The First Mrs. Fraser," of Mr. Ervine's authorship, to this city. When the Dramatic League of Chicago was very, very young [about a year and a half ago] along came this comedy about the First and the Second Mrs. Fraser, and their changeable husband. It was a success in Chicago, a "smash hit" on Broadway, and the Dramatic League has become an impressive factor in the playgoing life of the town.

This was merely a repetition of history. When the Theater Guild was in its swaddling clothes, and wondering how the next week's rent would be paid, up popped this same Mr. Ervine with a play called "Jane Clegg." The Guild promptly began to grow. After a season or two another dose of Ervine was administered, under the title of "John Ferguson," and the Theater Guild became a giant.

"The First Mrs. Fraser" came to the Selwyn last night to pay its party call on Chicago after ten months in New York and a prosperous tour. Grace George is still the charming matron of its diverting little intrigue, A. E. Matthews is still the Scotch husband who made the mistake of his life when he permitted her to divorce him, and Lawrence Grossmith is still the genial trout-fishing aspirant to her hand. So whatever replacements there may have been, it is in order to announce that "The First Mrs. Fraser" has a brilliant cast. The play itself is average drawing room comedy of the sound British school, but these three make it sound like a masterpiece.

Miss George's study of the middle-aged Mrs. Fraser is notable for suavity, gentle humor, and sly sparkle. This is one of the finest characterizations of the last year or two in polite comedy. It is a luminous example of acting as a fine art. Mr. Matthews' dour Scottish philanderer, and Mr. Grossmith's chuckling, sentimental Briton are admirable opposites for the star. An attractive new actress named Phyllis Elgar has succeeded the luscious Carol Goodner as the naughty lady of the proceedings.

"Green Grow the Lilacs," by Lynn Riggs, will begin a three weeks' engagement at the Illinois tonight under the auspices of the Theater Guild.

Episcopalians Urged to Have Marital Court.

New York, April 26.—(AP)—A statement that it is wrong to bring children into the world without adequate provision for them is contained in a report of a special commission on marriage, divorce, and remarriages to be presented to the general assembly of the Presbyterian church at Pittsburgh May 28 to June 3.

The report, made public today, was signed by all members of the commission.

"Earnest Christian people," says the report, "and asking for the church's guidance on the subject of birth control. This subject demands attention today as never before. Economic conditions nad a worthy standard of living make it wrong to bring children into the world without adequate provision for their nurture and proper consideration for the health of the mother.

"The Christian conception of sex clothes the relationship between husband and wife with spiritual significance, sanctifying marriage as a divine institution. Moral control is the basic essential to a worthy experience of a marriage relation."

The report deplored the prevalence of divorce and condemned "the deliberate steps taken by married people to secure divorce in order to remarry." The commission urged the church to reaffirm its position that divorce be sanctioned only in cases of willful desertion or adultery.

A commission, which will report to the next general meeting of the Protestant Episcopal church, proposes changes liberalizing the attitude toward divorce and remarriage.

Definite departures in the proposed new matrimonial and divorce law of the Episcopal church include:

Removal of all grounds for divorce, including unfaithfulness.

Sanction of remarriage of divorced persons under certain conditions.

Enumeration of nine grounds upon which a church court or a bishop may grant an annulment of marriage.

Provision that divorced persons who remarry shall not have the ceremony performed in the church and that a service other than that prescribed in the Book of Common Prayer be used.

The joint commission, headed by the Rt. Rev. Herman Page, bishop of Michigan, comprised leading ecclesiastical and legal minds and represented the various divisions of thought among the laity upon the subject.

Membership included the Rev. Percy G. Kammerer, secretary; John M. Glenn, treasurer; the Rt. Rev. Paul Matthews, bishop of New Jersey; the Rt. Rev. William J. Scarlett, bishop coadjutor of Missouri; the Rt. Rev. Cameron W. Davis, bishop coadjutor of western New York; the Rev. Frank H. Nelson, rector of Christ church, Cincinnati; the Very Rev. Frederick C. Grant, president of the Western Theological seminary; the Rev. Howard C. Robbins, former dean of the New York cathedral; the Rev. Caleb R. Stetson, rector of Trinity church, New York; Prof. Joseph H. Beale, member of Harvard law school; Origen S. Seymour, lawyer and chancellor of the diocese of Long Island; George W. Wickersham, former attorney general of the United States, and Roland S. Morris, former ambassador to Japan.

A proposed new canon "of matrimony," to be submitted by the joint commission appointed at the last general convention to study the question, recommends:

Removal of all grounds for divorce.

Creation of an ecclesiastical marital court to pass upon the fitness of divorced persons to remarry.

Enumeration of nine grounds upon which a marital court or a bishop may annul marriages.

The proposed new canon provides that where remarriage of persons is approved by a marital court the ceremony shall not be performed in the church nor shall the approved service in the Book of Common Prayer be used.

This provision is contained in Article 7, which also says: "Any person to whom divorce from a former marriage has been granted for any cause may, after the expiration of one year from the granting of the divorce, apply to his bishop or the ecclesiastical marital court of his domicile for permission to marry another person."

In his statement Bishop Page says: "One of the most striking changes in the proposed canon is that it removes all grounds for divorce, including adultery, on the other hand it should be noted that all penalties are removed so far as divorced persons are concerned.

"There was a practical agreement of the commission in regard to these changes. Indeed, the suggestion came from one of the most conservative members of the commission.

"There is one outstanding reason for removing the exception of adultery, namely, that in a divorce given by the civil court for adultery it is only too often the innocent party that is penalized.

"Many times when the wife is guilty, the husband makes himself the apparent offender in the eyes of the law. . . . This is often done for the sake of the family reputation; especially for the sake of the children."

Concerning the proposal to establish an ecclesiastical court, Prof. Beale wrote: "The majority of the members of the commission prefer to leave the finding of facts and the application of law in matters coming before the ecclesiastical authority to a permanently constituted court."

Carnegie History of World War About Done in 155 Books

New York, April 26.—(AP)—The history of the world war, on which the Carnegie endowment for international peace is engaged, totals 155 volumes, with 300 separate studies.

Dr. James T. Shotwell, director of the division of economics and history, today announced that the work is nearly completed, having taken eleven years.

Ten volumes have been published in the last year, he said. One of them deals with Austria's shifting income and is by Dr. Wilhelm Winkler. The effects of the war on Austria-Hungary are treated in another by Dr. Richard Schuller and Dr. Gustav Gratz.

Others are on Germany, including one by the late Dr. Moritz Liepmann, noted criminologist.

In two years 7,664 volumes, Dr. Shotwell reported, have been sold, besides the free distribution to important libraries.

ELIMINATING RATS.

Estimates of state and federal authorities place the annual losses incurred by land owners from inroads of rats at some fifty million dollars. Even this staggering figure, however, does not indicate fully the damage to buildings and to foodstuffs in a community where citizens become indifferent to the rapidity with which rat colonies multiply.

In many sections of Wisconsin, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, and nearby states an organized community drive is made each spring or fall against these rodents. Vigilante parties, working in cooperation with rural school leaders, employ poisons, guns, traps, and campaigns of improved building construction to keep down the menace.

One of the most effective weapons to be employed is the use of calcium cyanide, a compound that rapidly gives off hydrocyanic acid or prussic acid gas when acted upon by moisture in the air. For this reason it must be used with care. In dust form it is shot into hiding places with dust guns.

During summer months the rats are too scattered to be effectively eliminated. Since feed supplies are reduced in early spring, and this is the beginning of the breeding season, now is the time to start the drive. Better would be the fall, before the colony has consumed much feed or destroyed parts of buildings.

The best locations for using the cyanide are under floors, under feed boxes, or granaries, in burrows in the ground, in tile drains, or under barn or hog houses. Fill such places full until the gas begins to escape, then close them with stones or boards to hold in the fumes.

It is dangerous to use this dust on the gas in a high wind, in hay mows, strawstacks, or under open or loose floors. Likewise, the fumes are not concentrated sufficiently in such places to kill.

Girls Compete as Swimmers in Club Tank

BY THALIA ——

THE swimming contest at the Woman's Athletic club Saturday morning was a great success. The daughters of members who have been taking swimming and diving lessons in the club's lovely pool did themselves and their instructors proud, even if they didn't break any official records.

Gold, silver, and bronze medals were awarded for first, second, and third places in each of the classes designated as "sharks," "minnows," and "tadpoles," according to proficiency and ages.

Valeria Harris, Marjorie Mercer, and Annie May Henry took first, second, and third honors, respectively, in the junior diving class for sharks, and Mary Shuman, Nancy Lee Bowes, and Leonore Cudahy did the best fancy diving in the minnows' class. The 20 yard free style for sharks was won by Valeria Harris, Marjorie Mercer, and Evelyn Gordon, and for the minnows by Janet Musselman, Mary Shuman, and Margaret Reid. The tadpoles engaged in a 20 foot free style race, and the winners were Eleanor Talbot, Barbara Bowes, and Susan Sullivan. The balloon race, wherein the tadpoles swam from one side of the tank to the other, blew up balloons until they burst and then swam back, was won by Frances McGuire, Barbara Bowes, and Jean Sullivan.

The medals for the middle relay, a contest involving the donning and doffing of middle blouses—great fun for both participants and onlookers—went to the team consisting of Valeria Harris, Jean Kellogg, Janet Musselman, and Katherine Gilman. Janet Musselman and Nancy Lee Bowes won the lighted candle race for minnows.

The blithe-spirited medley of "April Frolleries" concocted by members of the Tavern for presentation at the Goodman theater this evening will be the raison d'etre for a gay party evening. Many of the members are having dinner parties before the entertainment, which is to begin at 9:30, and which will be followed by dancing in the foyer and a supper. Members who are to entertain at the Tavern include Burford Porter, who is to have a large party in one of the sky rooms; Tom Seyster, the William E. Casselberrys Jr., Thomas Wheelock and Bill Welsh, who are to be in the show; the Chauncey Blairs, and the Charles H. Chadwicks. Octave Thanet Tells the World Her Views About Various Things

Davenport, Ia., April 26.—[Special.]—Alice French (Octave Thanet), Iowa's first novelist to gain national recognition, though of the mid-Victorian period, is as alive to affairs of today as anybody. She has decided views and does not hesitate to express them. In her hotel suite overlooking the Mississippi river Miss French discussed politics, prohibition, foreign debts, Russia, modern novelists, etc.

Asked what she thought of Ernest Hemingway, Miss French expressed the opinion that he was a bore. She admitted she was not shocked by the realism of his "Farewell to Arms". Sinclair Lewis, she said, only scratched the surface. She believes the Republican party is losing all its big men and she predicted a Democratic victory next year. Miss French also believes the administration should use the Roosevelt big stick in Nicaragua.

BY ANTOINETTE DONNELLY.

"Dear Miss Donnelly: Your article of a recent morning touched the feline in me. I long to hunch my spinal column and hist at you. Why, just why, must you always 'blond' this world or 'brunette' it? Ye columnists fill paragraphs with silvery adjectives for the winsome blond and ye caress the vanity of your brunette reader by calling her 'dangerous' and 'stunning,' but nary a word do you utter for the titian.

"It is true that fairy princesses and Cinderella had hair like the golden sunshine. Heed me, I mention the word 'fairy,' but I speak not of myths when I mention the following real heroines of history whose names are familiar to all who read. Perk your ears, Miss Donnelly, for this is the war cry of the redhead. The uprising of fire which has been withstayed in our savage hearts.

"EVE, the most talked about woman, the fascinating, the alluring! Eve was a redhead. Not a blond, not a brunette, but auburn haired. Dip into your biblical history and learn of Eve. A few years ago the Chicago Civic Opera company displayed a most gorgeous wig of wavy auburn tresses which described the character of Eve.

"Next, CLEOPATRA—did she not dip her locks into the herbs of henna to make herself enticing to Mark? Did she use blond wiles to catch and hold her victims? Nay, nay; she used the fire, the fascination, and the mystery of an auburn haired maiden. And, I ask you, was she not successful?

"HELEN OF TROY, just another redhead worth mentioning. She's not a fairy heroine, she's a historic character of high acclaim. I defy a blond to accomplish her risky feat. That courage, my dear, is the essence of red hair and an auburn disposition.

"Madame Donnelly, I speak for the redhead, for the titian, for the carrot-topped maidens of yesterday and today. Are we envious of the blond? We are not. We are proud of our real heroines, of our material proof of alluring, and we are proud of today's auburn haired beauties. We belong to neither the blond class nor the brunette era. WE ARE RED HEADED and DARN PROUD OF IT!

"EVE'S LITTLE SISTER."

Thanks, "Eve"-let. Being more or less remotely connected with the clan myself, I was just waiting for a girl like you to do the speakin'.

WASHINGTON SOCIETY

Washington, D. C., April 26.—[Special.]—Vice President Curtis was given a dinner tonight by the chargé d'affaires of Egypt and Mme. Ismail Bey at the legation.

The assistant secretary of the navy and Mrs. David S. Ingalls gave a dinner last evening in honor of Mr. and Mrs. John Borden of Chicago. They are visiting Mrs. Borden's mother, Mrs. Frank C. Letts of Chicago and Washington. Other guests were Mr. and Mrs. Henry R. Luce of New York, who are spending the week-end with the hosts, Mr. and Mrs. Ingalls.

The German ambassador and Frau von Prittwitz und Gaffron were among the dinner hosts tonight.

The secretary of commerce and Mrs. R. P. Lamont had as their guest for a few days last week George Russell, Irish poet, who has been on a lecture tour of this country. He left yesterday for New York to sail for home.

Princess Elizabeth Cantacuzene, who came from Chicago to act as bridesmaid at the wedding of Countess Alice Szechenyi, daughter of the Hungarian minister, to Count Bela Hadik, is now with her aunt, Princess Cantacuzene, who was formerly Miss Julia Dent Grant, at the Mayflower. Princess Elizabeth has been visiting her aunt's cousins, Mr. and Mrs. Potter Palmer, in Chicago.

Mrs. Junkin has an exhibition of the princess' paintings which will continue for some days. Among those receiving with them today were Mrs. Sydney A. Cloman and Mrs. Thomas F. Walsh.

SURPLUS OF PASTORS TO BENEFIT CHURCHES, SEMINARY CHIEF HINTS

BY THE REV. JOHN EVANS.

Protestantism is approaching a point at which there will be more ministers than churches. This fact is being admitted by church leaders of all denominations. It is added to the information of great increases in applications for admission to theological seminaries. Thus in future only the highest type of men will be able to qualify for the ministerial office.

Such was the conclusion stated yesterday by the Rev. Dr. John Timothy Stone, president of the Presbyterian Theological seminary, Belden avenue and Halsted street. He announced that 50 young men will be graduated from that institution this week. Dr. Stone said that this will be the largest class in the 101 years of the seminary.

Practically all the 50 ministers-to-be are college graduates, Dr. Stone added, and that this graduation from the seminary is based upon three years' post-graduate study. Last fall 37 applicants were refused admission, because of lack of training or fitness for the ministry. This, according to Dr. Stone, probably is unprecedented in American seminary history.

The commencement program will come to a climax Thursday night in the Seminary church. The Rev. Dr. William H. Boddy, pastor of the First Presbyterian church, will be the commencement preacher. The fifty graduates represent fifteen states, Canada, and Switzerland.

Beatrice Woods Reminds Critic of Sir Joshua

BY ELEANOR JEWETT.

AN exhibit of delightful portraits by Beatrice Woods, a young artist still on the right side of thirty, is on view today in the Knoedler galleries. There is a decided air of the Romney and Sir Joshua Reynolds school of portraiture about her paintings. Yet, despite this, perhaps even because of it, you feel these portraits to be eminently livable pictures. You could hang "Phoebe" in your music room and feel as complacently at home with her infantile charms and graces as though you were more closely related to her than just by the purchase price.

"Phoebe" is indisputably the most like a Reynolds portrait of all these canvases. She is an adorable child in her quaint blue frock with a poke bonnet on her arm and three trim blossoms flowering at her knee. On a par with her, however, as far as beauty goes, is the "Mrs. Hugh Whittaker with her Son, David." One has nothing but praise for this group of mother and baby; David is still in white rompers. In color and composition this is a thoroughly fascinating and satisfying painting, picture as well as portrait.

"Mrs. Albert H. Chatfield" is lovely of face. A dignified portrait, this, full of character, personality, and the spiritual charm that darkens the laughing eyes. We should say, not knowing her, that Mrs. Chatfield was a good friend and a witty, clever woman. If one thinks the heavy wrap too exacting, perhaps that doubt has birth in the season. Spring is not the time for furs and thick, dark, festive robes. Beyond this portrait is a sketch roughly finished, delightful, the head of a boy, "Marston Allen Jr."

An objection may be raised to an occasional flutter of the artist's part into the artificial—for example, the rosy flush, the doll-like perfection, the waxen smoothness that obtains in the portraits of "Master Freddy Chatfield, and of "Evelyn, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Gustave Bouscaren." It seems a pity that as strong a painter as Miss Wood should allow herself to play with fire in an effort to prettify her subjects. Master Freddy is a charming boy, but I am not convinced that he has the complexion Miss Wood has given him. Similarly with the little girl.

Miss Wood does not fall often into error. Her portrait of Mrs. Rupert E. L. Warburton is thoroughly charming and convincing, as is the portrait of "Joanna." Of the two little girl heads "Anne" is adorable but "Olivia" too made up. The exhibit will continue to May 16 and is worth seeing.

Food Talk.

Mrs. J. F. B. wants to know how to make a mint gelatin and a salad of diced carrots in a mint gelatin. This is the time of the year when mint appeals to our fancy. The color is cool and the flavor refreshing.

There is a commercially prepared mint gelatin on the market which is most satisfactory. It is a sweetened green colored powder containing gelatin and a capsule of mint flavoring. All that one needs to do is to dissolve the powder in boiling water according to directions, then add the flavor. To make a salad, one adds the diced carrots just before the gelatin congeals.

The combination of the mint gelatin and carrots is good from both the standpoint of color and flavor, but the beauty of the salad depends largely upon careful preparation of the carrots and the molding of the gelatin mixture. I prefer to use partially cooked carrots unless they are cut into very small dice. If one will take the time to dice the carrots fine, raw carrots give a more interesting texture and flavor than the cooked ones. In dicing the carrots for a party salad perfect cubes should be striven for. Coarsely grated raw carrots are also attractive in this salad. Larger pieces of carrot may be used if the carrots are cooked. And attractive shapes of cooked and partially cooked carrots may be obtained by the use of fancy fluted and spiral cutters.

If the mint gelatin is not procurable at your own grocery it is an easy matter to make your own if you will provide yourself with plain granulated gelatin, a mint extract, and a good green vegetable coloring. Here is a recipe that is just as good as the commercial product, or to my mind, it is.

MINT GELATIN.

¼ cup cold water
1 cup boiling water
¾ cup sugar
3 tbsp. strained lemon juice
Green vegetable coloring
¾ tsp. spearmint extract

Soften the gelatin in the cold water for 5 minutes. Add the boiling water, stirring until the gelatin dissolves. Then add the sugar and lemon juice. Stir to hasten the dissolving of the gelatin. Then add coloring until the desired color is obtained. The color should be as near a mint leaf green as one can get it, but it is far better to have a color a little light than one too heavy. Add the extract last. Pour into a pan or molds rinsed with cold water. When about ready to congeal add the carrots, cut in the fashion or form that you prefer. When firm the gelatin in the pan may be cut into inch dice, squares, diamonds, circles, or whatever shape is desired for the salad service. Turn gelatin neatly onto lettuce leaves.

Yield: Ten salads.

FRENCH STEW OF HEARTS.

Take three lambs' hearts, wash and cut into slices, cutting across the grain of the heart. Put 3 tablespoons of butter in a small stew kettle and when hot add the meat. Stir constantly until the meat is well browned, then add enough hot water to nearly cover the meat, 2 slices of lemon, 2 bay leaves, 1 teaspoon salt and ½ teaspoon pepper. Cover the kettle and cook gently for one hour, stirring often. Add a little more boiling water as needed; when the meat is cooked remove from the gravy to a hot platter and thicken the gravy with one tablespoon of flour. Pour over the meat and serve.

Parents Often Worry Needlessly Over Children

BY GLADYS HUNTINGTON BEVANS

"Don't take things too hard," should be the advice given to overly conscientious parents of very young children. This applies particularly to those happenings which seem to involve moral issues. When I say "seem" to involve moral issues I mean just that—because moral issues don't exist for very young children.

The words lying, stealing, deception may be used for the acts of adults, but not rightfully for the acts of little children. And never, never, never should those words be used to a little girl or boy to describe what she or he has done.

What led up to these thoughts was a letter I received from a young father.

"We have a little girl 5 years old, who has given us a problem. She has learned deception. Here are the details. On her fifth birthday I gave her a ring which she wore to school. I then asked her about it. She said it was in the box, as she was saving it. Upon looking in the box, to my surprise I found it bent. The incident bothered me greatly. Please advise me how to overcome this before it develops further."

This father is so earnest that he sees a problem where there is none—where there is only an incident. His little girl was simply afraid he would be displeased at seeing the ring bent and tried to avoid his displeasure by keeping him from seeing it.

Things like this happen once or twice to practically all children and then are not repeated if a child is handled properly. The way to do this is, first, not to make too much of the happening. A gentle explanation will do. But most important is the second point, which is, during the early years to avoid giving your child reason to fear your displeasure or scolding. Investigation and study have proved that over 60 per cent of the lying of children is caused by fear.

All the little girl in this case needs is a friendly talk, with the idea put across by her father that he wants to be able always to believe her—no punishments, no scoldings.

Four Piece Ensemble Ideal for Any Week-End

BY BETTINA BEDWELL.

PARIS.—[Special.]—A practical four piece ensemble is a smart addition to any spring wardrobe. It should include a comfortable top coat that may be worn traveling, driving your own car or on chilly days in town. It should also include a suit, preferably of some fine checked material that is neither too sporty to serve as a town walking costume nor too dressy for good hard country wear. And finally, there should be a blouse or one of the new, soft, lacy sweaters—or really, there's no reason you shouldn't have both.

With such an ensemble you're all set for almost any kind of week-ending, and you don't have to lay it away in mothballs either if you happen to stay in town.

Chantal makes an ideal version of this ensemble idea. The suit, shown on the large figure, is of fine beige and white checked woolen. Its box plaited skirt is comfortable for walking. Its jacket is buttoned straight up the front, but is slit on either side, allowing the scarf ends of its blouse to pass through. It is collarless, has slit pockets and an interesting square shoulder cut. It is worn with a brown leather belt.

The coat, shown in the background, is of beige and black tweed. It gets the square shoulder look by having its sleeves cut in one with a yoke underlined by chevron shaped tucks that echo the tops of the panels inset in its skirt front. It has a high tailored collar of beaver, and a wide horizontally tucked leather belt.

The upper part of the blouse is in white wool mesh and its lower part and lower sleeves are formed of yellow beige and brown wool mesh incrustations. It ties in a scarf effect a little to one side in front.

Meanwhile, down at Springfield a group of bills designed to keep Illinois in the vanguard of the procession of progress which for years has marked this state's care and protection of its smallest citizens, is pending before the legislature. Revisions and additions to the laws under which was set up the first Juvenile court system in the world, and which also governed the establishment of the Institute for Juvenile Research, a model for other commonwealths, have been drawn up by the Illinois committee on child welfare legislation, headed by H. P. Chandler of Chicago.

→

Provision is made in the new bills for various responsibilities to be placed on states and counties. They include the appropriation of a large sum each year to aid mothers with dependent children; for one-half the salaries of county probation officers; for one-half the salaries of county superintendents of public welfare; for guardianship of dependent children for whom care cannot be obtained in smaller communities; for individualized care for delinquent or defective children encountered in the courts; for supervision of the work of all child caring agencies, and for investigation of petitions for child adoptions.

PATTERNS BY CLOTILDE

[Registered U. S. Patent Office.]

WOMAN'S DRESS.

This model of brown and white printed crêpe silk has splendid points so kind to the mature figure. The applied front that extends to the waistline narrows its breadth, and the dip in the hip seaming at the front gives the figure a lengthened line. The skirt plaits also help to carry out a vertical line. Navy blue flat crêpe silk with tiny vest of white crêpe is exceedingly modish and serviceable.

Pattern No. 3076 that may be copied exactly at a substantial saving is designed for sizes 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46, 48, 50 and 52 inches bust measure. Size 36 requires 4¼ yards of 39 inch material with 1 yard of 6 inch lace.

THE CLICK OF THE GATE

By Alice Campbell

SYNOPSIS.

Iris de Bertincourt lives in a remote section of Paris with her fifteen year old daughter, Clare. She and Maj. Alan Charnwood are desperately in love, but there are barriers to their immediate marriage. They are spending the last evening they will have together in several months, as Maj. Charnwood plans to leave next day for Africa. Clare is acting in a school play and is to be brought home by friends.

Iris has been separated for years from her husband, Marcel de Bertincourt, a man of enormous charm but utterly lacking in moral sense. Iris and he are cousins and the possible heirs of their Aunt Victoire, the Comtesse de Castelmaurou. Iris plans to divorce her husband and marry Alan when he returns, but she is keeping her plans secret, as she wishes to avoid the interference of her tyrannical aunt, who has until recently ruled her life.

Iris receives a message telling her her aunt is on her way to see her. Alan leaves. The comtesse tells Iris that her husband's character has wholly changed and that he is desirous of resuming his duties as a husband and father. She asks Iris to think it over and give her answer at the end of the week. Just after the comtesse leaves, Iris hears a motor stop in front of the house and hears Clare's friends bidding her good night. When she opens the door for Clare she has disappeared.

INSTALLMENT VII.

AN AGONIZED APPEAL.

Charnwood tightened his luggage straps and glanced round his modest hotel room, where no sign of his occupancy now remained save a litter of torn papers and Iris' photograph, leather-framed for traveling. This he picked up and studied raptly.

Strange how that single glimpse of her at Goodwood three months ago had altered his entire life. He had known nothing then of the fine steel fibers of her character masked by a deceptively fragile exterior, and till tonight had never adequately appreciated her triumphant struggle over difficulties. In the light of his present knowledge that first swift drawing together of their natures seemed more than ever a miracle. In a flash both had been electrified by the feeling of something momentous, definitive.

In earlier years Charnwood, whose family had been impoverished by the war, had not been able to think of marriage, and now that freedom had come—his two dependent sisters having found husbands, and his work bringing in a decent remuneration—he had believed it impossible to fall in love and had gone on, engrossed in engineering, philosophically accepting the trivial encounters which leave not a ripple on the surface of the heart. And then . . .

Who was that girl in fluttering chiffon and a wide hat, poised upon the greensward with the blue sky and floating clouds behind her, and a pair of field glasses trained upon the flying horses? Was she really with old Lady Murchisson? . . . "Alan Charnwood, of all people! Here, let me present you to Mme. Marcel de Bertincourt, who is over from Paris to stay with me."

No, his feelings were not extinct, only hibernating. More, they had grown and expanded under the sod. Within an instant he had found what he wanted and could never again be content with substitutes.

From thence onward he had paid frequent visits to Paris. There was a husband, worse luck, who by rights ought to have been got rid of years ago, but in these enlightened days one need not regard the dead wood of a legal tie as irremovable. All it meant was postponement and separation. The coming interval was simply a trial to be borne, with the certainty of happiness before their eyes. . . .

"Is that all, monsieur?"

It was the garçon, come to collect the bags.

"Ascenseur, s'il vous plait!" he shouted angrily down the void and rattled the framework, at the same time glancing at his watch.

An answering click sounded, the ropes vibrated within the shaft; but even as the cage came slowly into sight a sharp ring from the telephone in his abandoned room reached his ears.

He hesitated, then realizing that the one being in all Paris who knew his whereabouts was Iris herself, he dashed back, flung open the door, and snatched the receiver from its hook.

Iris' shaken voice was held in check by a desperate effort at control. So dry and breathless was it that only after several seconds of bewildered listening could he catch the drift of her meaning.

"She's gone, Alan! Disappeared. . . . I am half wild. . . . What ought I to do?"

"O, O, it's Clare! Only a minute ago, from the very doorstep. She came home; I heard her talking, but—she's not here."

There was a gasp, as if the speaker's throat was constricted with terror.

"But what nonsense! Darling, it's some stupid mistake. Of course it was some one else you heard."

"I am absolutely sure. I tell you I heard her, laughing and saying good-by. She was there for two or three minutes and then . . ."

Once more she was unable to complete the sentence. Charnwood's brain worked rapidly.

"Pull yourself together, dear!" he cried. "Keep calm; I'll come to you this second."

Banging down the receiver, he regained the waiting lift.

"Have my luggage taken back to my room," he called to the clerk as he hurried out. "I'm not leaving tonight, after all."

He would miss his sailing, but it could not be helped. Impossible to go off with that agonized appeal ringing in his ears. At the same time he was convinced all this excitement would prove a false alarm. He would arrive to find Clare laughing impishly at the stir she had caused. Girls of fifteen do not vanish into thin air in the space of a few seconds.

Yet as he got into a taxi there rose before him the lonely Passage de l'Oratoire, with its stretch of blank wall and its little retired houses, hemmed in on all sides by a quarter decidedly questionable. Had it not struck him this evening as somehow sinister, inviting deeds of violence?

Twelve minutes' reckless driving and his taxi drew up at the tiny pavilion, whose door stood open with a track of yellow light streaming out into the gloom. With quick strides he cleared the path, to be met by Iris, ashen-faced, trembling.

A glance was sufficient. Clare had not come home. Seizing the slight shoulders in a firm grasp, he said quietly:

"Now, then, my child! You don't take this seriously, I hope? Tell me again what happened."

Beneath the green velvet of her coat he could feel her body vibrating with terror. Her teeth chattered as she forced herself to answer connectedly.

"It was just as I told you—a quarter of an hour ago. The Webers' car drew up. I heard all the party chattering. When the gate clicked I came to the door." She shuddered uncontrollably. "No one was in sight."

"Utter, complete rubbish! It's quite evident you heard some one else, not Clare. Why, look!" he held out his watch for her to see, "it's only ten to eleven now."

She shook her head obstinately, resisting his efforts to draw her into the house. Over his shoulder her eyes, black with fear, stared into the darkness beyond.

"It doesn't matter. I am telling you I knew their voices—Clare's, Yvonne Weber's, her mother's—all three."

"And after the gate shut—did you hear nothing?"

He knit his brows, perplexed. There was no use arguing with her, yet he felt certain she was mistaken.

"But don't you see how absurd it is? If she had come into the garden you'd have heard something more. No, depened upon it, you mistook your gate for the one next-door, and your imagination supplied the rest. Sit down quietly and wait. I'm satisfied she'll be here in a very few minutes." Then, as she still refused to move from the doorstep, he added reasonably, "See here, what about ringing up this Weber person? Isn't that the obvious thing to do?"

He held fast to her icy hand while she hung on to the receiver, breathless. Presently she began to speak rapidly.

"Mme. Weber? She has returned? It is Mme. de Bertincourt speaking. Yes, I will hold the line."

"She has come home. Now we shall know. . . . Ah! It is you, madame?" Again she broke into French and, striving to hide her agitation, poured forth a torrent of questions.

Vocal Powers of the Boss.

Recently an auditor was in the office while there was a discussion about some real estate lots that the firm had wanted to acquire some time ago but which were priced too high. He said, "Those lots can be had for a song now." And I replied, "but the trouble is, my boss does not feel like singing right now." Imagine my embarrassment when I discovered the boss was standing in back of me all the time!

LONDON, April 26.—Sir Edward Clarke, who in the course of his political and legal activities in England summoned King Edward, then the prince of Wales, as a witness in the famous "baccarat scandal," and who postponed the realization of Irish home rule for a generation by wrecking the career of Charles Stewart Parnell in a divorce suit, died tonight at the age of 90.

The historic six year old Disraeli government was in power when Sir Edward won a seat in parliament, but lost it a few weeks later when Gladstone's party swept into power. He was returned later, however, by Plymouth and represented this district for 20 years. As solicitor general in the first Salisbury government he was made a knight.

The most famous of Sir Edward's court cases was the baccarat scandal, in which Sir William Gordon-Cumming was accused of cheating at cards in the presence of the prince of Wales (King Edward). Although denying the charge, he was forced to sign a pledge never to play again. Those present were pledged to secrecy, but gossip spread and Sir William brought a writ of slander against busy tongues in the royal court. Sir Edward Clarke, convinced of Sir William's innocence, prosecuted the suit and summoned the prince of Wales to the stand to tell his version on behalf of his client, although the British heir was convinced of the gambler's guilt. Sir Edward lost the case.

BY DORIS BLAKE.

From the pen of a judge who has presided over 20,000 divorce cases, there comes in a chapter of advice to young brides a paragraph that bears the approval of this writer and, surely, of every adult thinking person.

Judge George A. Bartlett is the judge with the long distance divorce case record, and Reno was his observation ground. In his advice to young brides, Judge Bartlett says. "After the first flush of marriage happiness the bride is going to judge her man by much the same standards as others judge him. If he hasn't measured up before in public opinion, the chances are strongly against his measuring up to her private opinion in the second year."

That should do away with some of the false hopes nurtured by inexperienced young women that marriage is going to create a new and altered being out of the men they take on. Character runs along pretty true to form in marriage and out of it.

Judge Bartlett's observation should prove a timely hint for one "Alice," who asks me about the advisibility of taking on for life one "George," an irresponsible who can't hold a job down more than six months; obviously a braggart; an employé who knows more about running his employer's business than the older, experienced man does.

It might also serve to enlighten "June" on her problem. Her proposed husband-selection is a most unsocial being. For some reason he introduces June to none of his friends. In fact, June tells that this contemplated mate of hers seems to have no men friends. She ascribes it to his insane jealousy—over her.

There are a few women who love a man though every one else may be down on him. But the great majority of our sex have this thing called pride so mixed up with the affections that the latter suffers a terrific blight if occasion for pride in the man fails in other people's eyes.

It's something to think over, girls. Just where and how does your "intended" stand with other men? Do they like him? Do they respect him? Or do they dismiss him as a lightweight? An undesirable? Or, what?

DORIS BLAKE ANSWERS

Thinks She Loves Him.

"Dear Miss Blake: I think a certain girl loves me, but when I ask her out she refuses and goes out with her girl friend. Please advise. TONY."

Mother Keeps Close Watch.

"Dear Miss Blake: I am 18. When I go out my mother waits in the window until I return and she will then come out and call me if I do not go right in. Please advise. BABS."

She should eliminate the call unless you spend too long a time saying "good-night."

SYNOPSIS.

Iris de Bertincourt lives in a remote section of Paris with her fifteen year old daughter, Clare. She and Maj. Alan Charnwood are desperately in love, but there are barriers to their immediate marriage. They are spending the last evening they will have together in several months, as Maj. Charnwood plans to leave next day for Africa. Clare is acting in a school play and is to be brought home by friends.

Iris has been separated for years from her husband, Marcel de Bertincourt, a man of enormous charm but utterly lacking in moral sense. Iris and he are cousins and the possible heirs of their Aunt Victoire, the Comtesse de Castelmaurou. Iris plans to divorce her husband and marry Alan when he returns, but she is keeping her plans secret, as she wishes to avoid the interference of her tyrannical aunt, who has until recently ruled her life.

Iris receives a message telling her her aunt is on her way to see her. Alan leaves. The countesse tells Iris that her husband's character has wholly changed and that he is desirous of reassuming his duties as a husband and father. She asks Iris to think it over and give her answer at the end of the week. Just after the comtesse leaves, Iris hears a motor stop in front of the house and hears Clare's friends bidding her good night. When she opens the door for Clare she has disappeared.

INSTALLMENT VII.

Charnwood tightened his luggage straps and glanced round his modest hotel room, where no sign of his occupancy now remained save a litter of torn papers and Iris' photograph, leather-framed for traveling. This he picked up and studied raptly.

Strange how that single glimpse of her at Goodwood three months ago had altered his entire life. He had known nothing then of the fine steel fibers of her character masked by a deceptively fragile exterior, and till tonight had never adequately appreciated her triumphant struggle over difficulties. In the light of his present knowledge that first swift drawing together of their natures seemed more than ever a miracle. In a flash both had been electrified by the feeling of something momentous, definitive.

In earlier years Charnwood, whose family had been impoverished by the war, had not been able to think of marriage, and now that freedom had come—his two dependent sisters having found husbands, and his work bringing in a decent remuneration—he had believed it impossible to fall in love and had gone on, engrossed in engineering, philosophically accepting the trivial encounters which leave not a ripple on the surface of the heart. And then . . .

Who was that girl in fluttering chiffon and a wide hat, poised upon the greensward with the blue sky and floating clouds behind her, and a pair of field glasses trained upon the flying horses? Was she really with old Lady Murchison? . . . "Alan Charnwood, of all people! Here, let me present you to Mme. Marcel de Bertincourt, who is over from Paris to stay with me."

No, his feelings were not extinct, only hibernating. More, they had grown and expanded under the sod. Within an instant he had found what he wanted and could never again be content with substitutes.

From thence onward he had paid frequent visits to Paris. There was a husband, worse luck, who by rights ought to have been got rid of years ago, but in these enlightened days one need not regard the dead wood of a legal tie as irremovable. All it meant was postponement and separation. The coming interval was simply a trial to be borne, with the certainty of happiness before their eyes. . . .

"Is that all, monsieur?"

It was the garçon, come to collect the bags.

"Ascenseur, s'il vous plait!" he shouted angrily down the void and rattled the framework, at the same time glancing at his watch.

An answering click sounded, the ropes vibrated within the shaft; but even as the cage came slowly into sight a sharp ring from the telephone in his abandoned room reached his ears.

He hesitated, then realizing that the one being in all Paris who knew his whereabouts was Iris herself, he dashed back, flung open the door, and snatched the receiver from its hook.

Iris' shaken voice was held in check by a desperate effort at control. So dry and breathless was it that only after several seconds of bewildered listening could he catch the drift of her meaning.

"She's gone, Alan! Disappeared. . . . I am half wild. . . . What ought I to do?"

"O, O, it's Clare! Only a minute ago, from the very doorstep. She came home; I heard her talking, but—she's not here."

There was a gasp, as if the speaker's throat was constricted with terror.

"But what nonsense! Darling, it's some stupid mistake. Of course it was some one else you heard."

"I am absolutely sure. I tell you I heard her, laughing and saying good-by. She was there for two or three minutes and then . . ."

Once more she was unable to complete the sentence. Charnwood's brain worked rapidly.

Banging down the receiver, he regained the waiting lift.

"Have my luggage taken back to my room," he called to the clerk as he hurried out. "I'm not leaving tonight, after all."

He would miss his sailing, but it could not be helped. Impossible to go off with that agonized appeal ringing in his ears. At the same time he was convinced all this excitement would prove a false alarm. He would arrive to find Clare laughing impishly at the stir she had caused. Girls of fifteen do not vanish into thin air in the space of a few seconds.

Yet as he got into a taxi there rose before him the lonely Passage de l'Oratoire, with its stretch of blank wall and its little retired houses, hemmed in on all sides by a quarter decidedly questionable. Had it not struck him this evening as somehow sinister, inviting deeds of violence?

Twelve minutes' reckless driving and his taxi drew up at the tiny pavilion, whose door stood open with a track of yellow light streaming out into the gloom. With quick strides he cleared the path, to be met by Iris, ashen-faced, trembling.

Beneath the green velvet of her coat he could feel her body vibrating with terror. Her teeth chattered as she forced herself to answer connectedly.

"It was just as I told you—a quarter of an hour ago. The Webers' car drew up. I heard all the party chattering. When the gate clicked I came to the door." She shuddered uncontrollably. "No one was in sight."

"Utter, complete rubbish! It's quite evident you heard some one else, not Clare. Why, look!" he held out his watch for her to see, "it's only ten to eleven now."

She shook her head obstinately, resisting his efforts to draw her into the house. Over his shoulder her eyes, black with fear, stared into the darkness beyond.

"It doesn't matter. I am telling you I knew their voices—Clare's, Yvonne Weber's, her mother's—all three."

He knit his brows, perplexed. There was no use arguing with her, yet he felt certain she was mistaken.

"But don't you see how absurd it is? If she had come into the garden you'd have heard something more. No, depend upon it, you mistook your gate for the one next door, and your imagination supplied the rest. Sit down quietly and wait. I'm satisfied she'll be here in a very few minutes." Then, as she still refused to move from the doorstep, he added reasonably, "See here, what about ringing up this Weber person? Isn't that the obvious thing to do?"

"Mme. Weber? She has returned? It is Mme. de Bertincourt speaking. Yes, I will hold the line."

"She has come home. Now we shall know. . . . Ah! It is you, madame?" Again she broke into French and, striving to hide her agitation, poured forth a torrent of questions.

EMBARRASSING MOMENTS

Recently an auditor was in the office while there was a discussion about some real estate lots that the firm had wanted to acquire some time ago but which were priced too high. He said, "Those lots can be had for a song now." And I replied, "but the trouble is, my boss does not feel like singing right now." Imagine my embarrassment when I discovered the boss was standing in back of me all the time!

HAROLD TEEN—POP LIKES TO SOW SEEDS OF DISCONTENT

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

LONDON, April 26.—Sir Edward Clarke, who in the course of his political and legal activities in England summoned King Edward, then the prince of Wales, as a witness in the famous "baccarat scandal," and who postponed the realization of Irish home rule for a generation by wrecking the career of Charles Stewart Parnell in a divorce suit, died tonight at the age of 90.

The historic six year old Disraeli government was in power when Sir Edward won a seat in parliament, but lost it a few weeks later when Gladstone's party swept into power. He was returned later, however, by Plymouth and represented this district for 20 years. As solicitor general in the first Salisbury government he was made a knight.

The most famous of Sir Edward's court cases was the baccarat scandal, in which Sir William Gordon-Cumming was accused of cheating at cards in the presence of the prince of Wales (King Edward). Although denying the charge, he was forced to sign a pledge never to play again. Those present were pledged to secrecy, but gossip spread and Sir William brought a writ of slander against busy tongues in the royal court. Sir Edward Clarke, convinced of Sir William's innocence, prosecuted the suit and summoned the prince of Wales to the stand to tell his version on behalf of his client, although the British heir was convinced of the gambler's guilt. Sir Edward lost the case.

BY DORIS BLAKE.

From the pen of a judge who has presided over 20,000 divorce cases, there comes in a chapter of advice to young brides a paragraph that bears the approval of this writer and, surely, of every adult thinking person.

Judge George A. Bartlett is the judge with the long distance divorce case record, and Reno was his observation ground. In his advice to young brides, Judge Bartlett says. "After the first flush of marriage happiness the bride is going to judge her man by much the same standards as others judge him. If he hasn't measured up before in public opinion, the chances are strongly against his measuring up to her private opinion in the second year."

That should do away with some of the false hopes nurtured by inexperienced young women that marriage is going to create a new and altered being out of the men they take on. Character runs along pretty true to form in marriage and out of it.

Judge Bartlett's observation should prove a timely hint for one "Alice," who asks me about the advisibility of taking on for life one "George," an irresponsible who can't hold a job down more than six months; obviously a braggart; an employé who knows more about running his employer's business than the older, experienced man does.

It might also serve to enlighten "June" on her problem. Her proposed husband-selection is a most unsocial being. For some reason he introduces June to none of his friends. In fact, June tells that this contemplated mate of hers seems to have no men friends. She ascribes it to his insane jealousy—over her.

There are a few women who love a man though every one else may be down on him. But the great majority of our sex have this thing called pride so mixed up with the affections that the latter suffers a terrific blight if occasion for pride in the man fails in other people's eyes.

It's something to think over, girls. Just where and how does your "intended" stand with other men? Do they like him? Do they respect him? Or do they dismiss him as a lightweight? An undesirable? Or, what?

DORIS BLAKE ANSWERS

Thinks She Loves Him.

"Dear Miss Blake: I think a certain girl loves me, but when I ask her out she refuses and goes out with her girl friend. Please advise. TONY."

Mother Keeps Close Watch.

"Dear Miss Blake: I am 18. When I go out my mother waits in the window until I return and she will then come out and call me if I do not go right in. Please advise. BABS."

BY IRVING VAUGHAN.

The charitable tendencies of Vic Frasier and Bill Cissell put the White Sox in a hopeless tangle yesterday and Detroit's Tigers profited accordingly. Frasier issued passes with reckless abandon and "Spider Bill" erred twice. Mixed with these was a fairly representative batch of hostile hits, and from this the Tigers brewed an 8 to 4 triumph. The Sox, however, are entitled to an alibi.

JONATHAN STONE.

It was too cold for outdoor labor of any kind, but despite this drawback, some 6,500 remained until they had seen all there was to see.

Frasier's generosity was so extensive that he surrendered ten passes before getting into a jam from which a rescuer had to extricate him in the eighth. He also had allowed ten hits, but even with all this against his record he was in the ball game with a 4 to 4 tie until a homer by Jonathan Stone in the seventh brought on the inevitable rout. As Frasier drifted from the scene of action he probably was bemoaning the fact that he hadn't even exceeded his opponents in generosity. Two Tiger hurlers also made formal presentation of ten tickets to first base.

Sox Given Four Runs.

Unlike Frasier, the Tiger pitchers, Vic Sorrell and Charley Sullivan, had some system about serving the bases on balls. They didn't permit many hits to be mixed with the complimentaries. By the time Sorrell was ready for banishment with two out in the third, the Sox already had six passes but only two safeties. From this they had four runs practically forced on them, thus keeping pace with the Tigers, who also got a flying start against Frasier. As soon as Sorrell retired from action the south side bats ceased to function. His successor was frisked for only one hit, a double by Simons in the sixth.

Blue Scores First.

Frasier started the first inning powerfully enough, but it was only a flash. He fanned Harvey Walker. Johnson banked a single to right and lost no time stealing second. Gehringer walked and with Johnson worked a double steal. Free passage to Alexander filled the bases. Nothing would have come of this if Cissell hadn't slipped up. He took Appling's throw on McManus to force Alexander at second, but in trying to complete a double play turned the ball to the grand stand. Johnson and Gehringer used the error to score. After a pass to Stone the

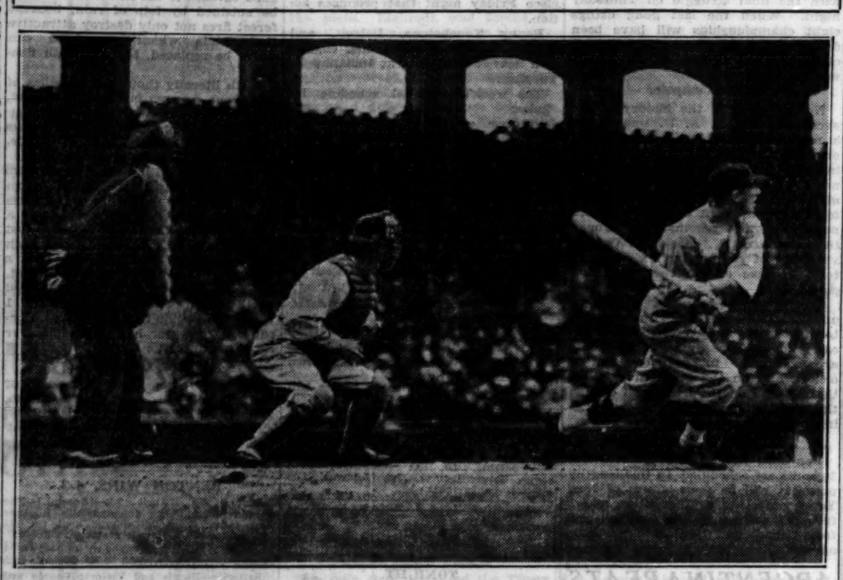
WHEN TIGERS TREED SOX



Roy Johnson, Detroit outfielder, hits a single in the first inning of yesterday's game between the Sox and Tigers at Comiskey park. Catcher Butch Henline and Umpire Brick Owens are back of the plate. The Tigers won, 8 to 4. [TRIBUNE Photos.]

JONES, DIEGEL TIE DUTRA BROTHERS IN CHARITY GOLF

Los Angeles, Cal., April 26.—(AP)—Bobby Jones and Leo Diegel squared their exhibition 18 hole charity golf match today with Mortie and Olin Dutra by launching a determined comeback on the last five holes. The match ended with the teams on even terms.

Two thousand fans waded and slid over the muddy course to see Jones play a rather indifferent game and miss the chance to win the match on the eighteenth green when his five foot putt was wide of the cup.

The Dutra brothers turned the first nine one up and increased their lead to two on the tenth. Jones took a birdie four on the fourteenth to decrease the lead by half and then he and Diegel parred the sixteenth, squaring the match.

Denies Umpires Were Called In to Clear Selves

New York, April 26.—(AP)—President John A. Heydler of the National league today denied that he had "called in" three umpires to explain doubtful decisions made in the west. It is a mere coincidence, he explained, that the three umpires, Magerkurth, Moran, and McGrew, who officiated in the protested game between the St. Louis Cardinals and Chicago Cubs at Chicago last Sunday, have come east in one of the periodical changes made by National league umpires.

St. Louis protested the game on the grounds an improper decision had been made on a fly ball hit into the overflow crowd by Jim Bottomley when Orsatti was on first. Stephenson went after the ball and it was not certain whether he made the catch. The umpires ruled a fan had interfered with the fielder and declared Bottomley out, but allowed Orsatti to go to third.

According to a league rule, Heydler explained, umpires must change the scene of their activities from one section to another at regular intervals. The arbiters' report on the game protested already had been received before they came east.

"Since they are in the east," he added, "they probably will be asked to supplement the regular report before a decision is made on the protest. But there is nothing more to the report than that."

Golfers Get New Ratings from C.D.G.A.

Players in the Chicago golf district have long been faced with the question of how they can compete at various clubs in handicap events with the assurance that they are on an equal basis with Mr. Opponent. They know they stand an equal chance with members of their own club, inasmuch as their grade is determined over a common course, but they are also aware that they have an edge on a player of like handicap from an easier course than their own, and that they are not equal to one of the same grade from a harder course.

The problem has been answered by the Chicago District Golf association. Within the next few days more than 6,000 handicap cards will be distributed to members of all association clubs with a home course rating of 20 or less. The new cards designate a district handicap based not only on their home course scores but on how their home course compares with all others.

Committee Studies Courses.

Credit for this aid to interclub competition goes to the handicap committee of the association, composed of John McKinlay Jr., chairman; John Lehman of Olympia Fields, George B. Harrington of Knollwood, Jack Westland of Sunset Ridge, Chick Evans of Edgewater, J. Howard Johnson of Midlothian, W. W. Hodgson of Oak Park, John H. Coulter of Bob O'Link, and Joe Davis of Acacia.

These men have made a thorough analysis of all clubs. They have considered yardage, hazards and condition. They personally visited each course until the record was complete, and each player whose name had been forwarded to the committee at the close of last season had been classified.

Form Three Classes.

The courses were graded A, B, and C. Players from class A clubs, the most difficult, held their home handicaps. Those from class B clubs were given an additional couple of strokes to place them on a parity with class A and class C men were awarded still more strokes to balance them with A and B.

Need for such a system was brought to the attention of the committee by a study of handicap tournaments of the past. At the more difficult courses the home boys carried off the honors, while at the easier ones the spoils went to players from the harder courses. Under the new system, what club is host is of minor importance in determining victors.

Players from four different courses can now form a foursome on a fifth without the customary argument on the first tee about how many strokes who will give whom.

TITLE: 'A BONER'; CAST: LYN LARY AND LOU GEHRIG

Plot: Home Run Results in 3d Out; Yanks Lose, 9-7

Washington, D. C., April 26.—(AP)—Washington won a weird ball game from New York here today, 9 to 7—with the margin of victory presented by the Yankees.

Lou Gehrig, hard hitting first baseman, and Lyn Lary, shortstop, figured in a "bonehead" classic that cost the Yankees two tallies in the opening inning.

Lary, racing toward home, apparently looked up to see Rice's catch and thought the side was out. He turned from third base toward the dugout and failed to go home.

Lou, streaking in, raced on to the plate. The umpire called Lary out, retiring the side and two runs were not counted.

Fischer, young Washington pitcher, who got credit for the victory, struck out 10 men. The Senators used three pitchers and the Yankees four. Score:

PIRATES BEAT CARDS, 1-0

St. Louis, Mo., April 26.—(AP)—Scoring one run in the sixth inning without the assistance of a hit, the Pittsburgh Pirates gave the St. Louis Cardinals their first defeat of the home season this afternoon, 1 to 0. Heine Meine held the Cardinals to four hits.

Two bases on balls off Hallahan, losing Card pitcher, a stolen base and then a long fly produced the only run of the game. Rain and cold weather had kept the Cardinals idle since the opener here last Wednesday. Score:

Ruth Leaves Hospital as His Understudy Is Injured

Washington, D. C., April 26.—(AP)—Allen (Dusty) Cooke, Yankee right-fielder, who took Babe Ruth's place when the Bambino was hurt, will be lost to New York for at least two weeks because of injuries received in today's game with the Washington Senators.

ALLEN COOKE.

Cooke, who fell on his head and shoulders when he dived for Bluge's hard drive in the third inning, was taken from the field to the hospital. The hit, which should have been a single, went for a home run.

The New York player, doctors said tonight, had displaced the outer end of his right collarbone and several ligaments were torn, but an X-ray showed no bones were broken.

Whether he will be sent to New York or will return to his home at Durham, N. C., was undetermined tonight.

FANS GREET BABE.

New York, April 26.—(AP)—Five hundred baseball fans greeted Babe Ruth, the ailing Yankee slugger, on his arrival at 8:30 o'clock tonight from Boston. Five husky policemen surrounded his wheel chair and held off the crowd as Ruth was trundled out to his waiting automobile.

Although the Babe said he "felt fine" except for his injured leg, he seemed to be in pain and his customary grin was missing. After posing for photographers and talking to reporters, he climbed carefuly into his car and was driven home.

RUTH LEAVES HOSPITAL.

Boston, Mass., April 26.—(AP)—Babe Ruth left the hospital and went home today, vowing he would be back in the lineup next Thursday when the New York Yankees take on the champion Athletics at Philadelphia.

It appears, however, that the injured home run king is over-optimistic. Although his bruised left thigh has improved enough to warrant his removal from the Peter Bent Brigham hospital, Dr. Francis C. Newton, who attended him, predicted it would be at least two weeks before the impatient star would be able to play baseball.

Babe Improves Rapidly.

"Ruth's rapid improvement justified his departure from the hospital," Dr. Newton said. "He has promised to go straight to his New York apartment and remain there, under the careful supervision of the New York Yankees' physician. I am certain the latter will not permit the Babe to attempt to play against the Athletics this week. It will be two weeks, at least, before his leg will be strong enough for that kind of work."

Ruth was in a cheerful mood when he quit the hospital, soon after lunch. With some assistance from Mrs. Ruth, he demolished a roast chicken, the gift of Dave Shean, former Boston Braves' infielder, who now is operating a market in the Faneuil Hall district.

After this hearty repast, the Babe was handed his sturdy walking stick, placed in a wheel chair, and pushed out to the automobile of Superintendent of Police Michael H. Crowley, which carried him to the railroad station.

Carried to Compartment.

Another wheel chair was waiting for him at the station, as well as an army of eager porters. They wheeled him carefully through the large crowd that gathered to see him off and then tenderly half carried him aboard the Pullman and into his compartment. Every move was closely supervised by Mrs. Ruth.

Babe was not taking any chances of missing that train. He left the hospital almost an hour before its departure, and, since it was only a 15 minute drive to the station, he had a long wait. He spent it conversing with the police official and his son, Paul Crowley, and several other friends.

BY EDWARD BURNS.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Cincinnati, O., April 26.—Charley Root this afternoon shook off the terrible and amazing Redland field jinx that cost the Cubs a pennant last year, and won his third victory of the season. The score was Chicago, 3; Cincinnati, 1.

CHARLEY ROOT.

Root allowed only six hits, the same number he permitted the Cardinals a week ago, and two more than he allotted the Pirates on opening day. Charley had to bear down more than he should have on this bleak day because of the scarcity of runs the Cubs were able to manufacture from thirteen hits. Four double plays did much to keep the Cubs from piling up a more imposing margin of victory.

Hornsby Continues Streak.

Manager Hornsby continued active with his bat, making three hits in five times at bat, including singles his first two times up. This showing lifted his season batting average to .425 and he now has batted .733 in the three games of the current road trip. Three homers, a double, and seven singles in fifteen times at bat.

Woody English, runnerup to his boss for hitting honors among the regulars, made two hits and kept his season batting mark at .400, while Riggs Stephenson, No. 3 in the Cub standings, gained nine points to establish his average at .368. Hack Wilson failed twice in pinches, but got two hits to lift his season average from .228 to .250. Charley Grimm also got two singles to boost his tabulation from .143 to .184.

President Sidney Weil of the Reds announced that if it isn't much warmer tomorow the game will be called off. Tuesday's scheduled contest has been postponed because of the funeral of Garry Herrmann, for twenty-five years president of the Reds.

Wilson Hits Into Double Play.

Net production of the first three Cub innings was one run despite two sizeable rallies, in the first inning and in the third. Both incipient onslaughts were punctured by the disconsolate Mr. Wilson.

The game opened with Cuyler drawing a pass from Frey. Kiki went to second while Cuccinello was throwing out English and to third on Hornsby's

MARKS SET AT DRAKE SURPASS THOSE AT PENN

Westerners Hold Edge in 12 of 17 Events.

BY WILFRID SMITH.

The intense rivalry each year between the country's two greatest relay carnivals, Pennsylvania and Drake, provides additional healthy competition. Penn's thirty-seventh annual relays and Drake's twenty-second were no exception.

Perhaps the weather handicapped the athletes at Pennsylvania Saturday, but while the day was fair with the sun shining intermittently, the chill breeze also kept the stars at Drake from reaching top form. Many of the marks made at Kansas a week before were not approached by the same men, and to that there was only one answer, weather conditions.

Two Meets Compared.

To these great meets, all sections of the United States sent representative squads except the Pacific coast. However, Washington State from Pullman, Wash., entered a squad of seven at Drake including Hein, its best javelin thrower, and Paul Swift, who had run the 100 yard dash at Kansas in 9.5 seconds.

Seventeen relays and individual events at Pennsylvania and Drake offer comparison. Another, the sprint medley, cannot be compared. At Drake this event was closed to university teams. The winning time of Wichita was beaten by Ohio State, which obviously is an unfair comparison.

The Drake athletes won 12 of the 17 events on comparative marks, lost three and tied two. Ohio State, a member of the Western conference, won three relays at Penn while Keller, the Buckeyes' hurdler, won the 120 yard race and Munn of Minnesota captured the shot put.

Penn Leads in Attendance.

The results speak for themselves. The Drake relays have outdistanced those at Pennsylvania in standards of competition. Pennsylvania, however, with the population of a great city to draw upon, still leads in attendance. Twenty-five thousand watched the Penn races Saturday, with 10,000 at Des Moines, Ia.

The eighth relay carnival at Ohio State Saturday in which seven Big Ten universities will compete completes the season begun last month in Texas.

Until the eastern intercollegiates and the national collegiates at Stagg field, track and field now will be a program of local meets and conference championships.

CAPABLANCA IS HELD TO DRAW IN CHESS TOURNEY

New York, April 26.—(AP)—Jose R. Capablanca, Cuban chess wizard, played his first drawn game of the international chess masters' tournament today in the seventh round. The draw was with Herman Steiner after 21 moves when both players resorted to repetition. Previously Capablanca had won five successive matches and adjourned one.

Capablanca, playing the white side of a Ruy Lopez allowed Steiner to retreat from a mixup one man to the good rather than have his pawn line broken. The Cuban still was one piece behind when the end came, but did not care to take chances with his position.

I. S. Turover of Washington was awarded a victory over Arthur W. Dake, Portland, Ore., by the tournament director, Dr. N. L. Lederer. Turover was hard pressed for time and after his 40th move claimed the game on the ground that Dake had disturbed him. The director upheld the claim.

AMERICAN HORSE WINS FEATURE AT LONGCHAMP

LONGCHAMP, France, April 26.—(AP)—Two big selection races marked the Sunday racing card at Longchamp today, one of them going to the American owner, Jefferson Davis Cohn. Amfortas, Cohn's four year old won the 73d Prix biennial, a mile and a fourth fifth event worth $3,000. Guernaville finished second in the field of seven starters and Janeiro third. The winner paid 5 to 2.

A long shot, S. Guthmann's Roi de Trefle, won the second feature, the 74th Prix biennial, valued at $2,000. Ciseleur finished second and Target third. The winner paid 34 to 1. Eleven three year olds started in this race, which was for three year olds.

TalentedHoofs Await Aurora Track Opening

There will be an abundance of thoroughbred talent on hand when the Chicago racing season opens Friday at Exposition park, Aurora. Many of the best horses that will compete in the twenty day meeting are at the track.

Among the most recent arrivals is Ray Pollard's string from Maryland. Included in this group are Gold Mint, Princeton, Uluniu and Cog Air. Horses owned by Ben Rosnehim of Chicago arrived yesterday from Louisville. Among the best in Rosnehim's stable are Nora D., Gossoon, Atill, Portmanteau, Willing, and Racketeer.

Entries Close Wednesday.

Then there are some Kentucky bred racers that have been attracting considerable attention. L. M. Holmes of Kentucky has a band of young horses, most of them sired by Noel, which is a full brother to Escoba and a half brother to the stake horse, Mars.

W. L. Johnson of New Orleans has checked in with Whilcaway, a Whiskaway gelding. Others in his string are Golden West, Solon G. Wilson, Eraggadocio, Classy, and Mosque. Johnson also has Sweep On, a two year old gelding, and Prince Sweep.

Entries for the Inaugural handicap, feature race of Friday's opening card, close Wednesday. Weights will be assigned the following day. Since opening day is also "ladies' day," the management expects a large crowd, provided the weather is suitable.

Practice on Dirt Road.

The track was heavy last week because of several showers, but this did not impede training work. Because of the large number of horses on the track it has become necessary to utilize a dirt road to the rear of the fair grounds.

Schooling races are being conducted each morning and afternoon under the supervision of Johnny Morrissey, son of Starter Harry Morrissey. Arthur Blanchard, paddock and placing judge, has arrived from New Orleans and will watch the workouts today.

VALLEY REGATTA IS AWARDED TO BEAUMONT, TEX.

Beaumont, Tex., was awarded the 1931 regatta of the Mississippi Valley Power Boat association at the semi-annual meeting yesterday, held in connection with the second Chicago boat show at Navy pier.

The association adopted open divisions for outboard motor racing at all piston displacements, removing restrictions on nonstock motors entered by professionals. Piston displacements will be the only restrictions, President R. B. Lechenger of Houston said.

A race May 14 by the Lakes-to-the-Gulf association of Chicago was sanctioned.

The dates of the Beaumont meet will be July 3, 4, and 5.

U. S. Track Athletes Set New Records in Japan

TOKIO, April 26.—(AP)—The visiting American track stars shattered two Japanese records today in the second day's events of the eastern Japan semi-final Olympic tryouts. George Simpson of Ohio State won the 200 meter dash in 21 seconds flat, beating Takamori Yoshioka of Bunkika university, Tokio. Yesterday Yoshioka defeated Simpson in the 100 meters. Harlow Rothert of Stanford university was an easy winner in the shot put, casting the weight 14.31 meters [46 feet 11¾ inches].

Equipoise's Illness Is Just Mild Ailment

HAVRE DE GRACE, Md., April 26.—(AP)—Equipoise, Preakness and Kentucky Derby favorite, who was beaten badly in his second start as a three year old in the Chesapeake stakes yesterday, "probably will be all right by tomorrow."

The C. V. Whitney horse, leading money winner in America as a two year old, ran last in the field of five because of a slight attack of kidney poisoning, according to the veterinarian for the Maryland tracks.

Other Horses Sick.

The horse was examined after yesterday's race and his illness pronounced azoturia. Other horses have been victims of the same malady, probably because of a sudden change in weather.

Jockey Pulls Up in Stretch.

Absence today from Equipoise's stable of the trainer and attendants, who had taken the other Whitney horses to the Pimlico track, indicated, according to Burke, the illness was not considered serious.

Mr. Burke said Equipoise seemed to be in good condition yesterday as he went to the post and broke well, but did not run, and in the back stretch was pulled up by its jockey, Albert Robertson.

Nat'l A. A. U. Ring Tourney Opens Tonight

New York, April 26.—[Special.]—The Amateur Athletic union's national boxing championship tournament, the blue ribbon event of the year for the simon pures of the ring, comes back to New York tomorrow night for the first time in thirty years.

At 7:30 o'clock the ring in Madison Square Garden will be the battle platform for a pair of struggling youngsters as the tournament begins. It will continue through Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and conclude with the final struggle on Thursday night. When the last gong clangs eight championships will have been determined in as many standard ring classes, from flyweight to heavyweight.

150 to Compete.

Never before in the history of the event has the A. A. U. undertaken a national championship tournament on such an elaborate scale. Extending the event over four nights is a novelty dictated by conditions because more than 150 boxers have been entered for the eight classes, a record number of title nominations. For a time the A. A. U. considered the advisability of conducting matinée contests because of the record making entry.

This plan, however, was rejected and as alternative came the decision to start each night's program at an early hour. Tuesday night the bouts are scheduled to commence at 6 o'clock and on the progress made in the advance on the finals will depend the starting hours for the two closing nights.

Thirty Bouts Each Night.

For each night of the tournament 30 bouts are scheduled. In this lengthy program will be seen boxers of New York competing against title seekers from all corners of the country, and from Canada and the Hawaiian islands as well.

ARGENTINA BEATS CHILE IN DAVIS CUP COMPETITION

SANTIAGO, Chile, April 26.—(AP)—Argentina won the South American zone Davis cup final today, capturing two singles matches to clinch the victory over Chile with three straight triumphs. The Argentine doubles team defeated the Chileans in the opening match yesterday.

By winning the first three of the five scheduled matches, Argentina won the right to face the North American zone winner, still to be determined, in the interzone competition.

Andriano Zappa, Argentina's No. 1 player, was given the hardest struggle of the three matches today by the Chilean substitute player, Egan Schoenherr. The scores were 2-6, 6-2, 6-0, 6-0. Schoenherr substituted for Chile's leading player, Elias Deik, who was injured a few days ago. In the second singles match, Guillermo Robson clinched the victory for Argentina by defeating Lionel Page, 6-2, 6-2, 6-4.

Rosenbloom Only Ring Champion in Action This Week

New York, April 26.—(AP)—Following last week's brief flurry of excitement in Chicago, when Tony Canzoneri flattened Jackie Berg, the boxing game was scheduled to settle back into its accustomed peace and quiet for the ensuing week.

All but one of the champions will be conspicuous by their absence from the ring, and most of the outstanding contenders face a week's rest. Maxie Rosenbloom, the light heavyweight king, will meet the veteran George Manley at Denver Thursday night, but his title will not be at stake.

Young Corbett, Fresno welterweight, and Tommy Herman of Chicago will meet in a ten rounder at San Francisco Friday night that promises action.

BEWARE, TROUT! FISHING SEASON TO OPEN FRIDAY

Low Water to Aid Anglers in Spring Drive.

BY BOB BECKER.

The ears of thousands of outdoor fans are being turned this week to what the fiction writers describe as the "clarion call," because on Friday hundreds of trout streams in the north woods are open to fishing. This May migration by the anglers marks the first real contact with the wilderness north country for countless outdoor fans. These trout fishermen are only the vanguard of millions who will travel up and down the lake countries of the central states before the spring and summer have gone.

If there ever was a time when the trout of our middle western streams were faced with a problem it's this spring. The country is so shy of good old-fashioned soaking rains which usually turn small streams into flooded rivers that genuine low water conditions prevail. Several heavy or continued rainstorms might change this situation before many of the trout anglers begin to attack the streams. But for the last six weeks the residents in the north woods have been hoping to see such an evidence of spring which would end the menace of forest fires.

Fishing Periled by Fires.

Trout fishermen as a class would be willing to forego low water, ideal stream conditions and the chance for good catches if the fire menace could be subdued by lots of rain, because forest fires not only destroy attractive timberlands which sometimes can never be replaced, but also ruin fishing.

With literally thousands of miles of fine trout streams in the middle west, anglers have a wide choice for opening day fishing. There are streams suitable for fishing from a canoe. There are others ideal for wading.

This spring, with a good break from the weather man in the way of warm weather, there should be no trouble for the fly fisherman in his getting a creel full with the use of feathers tied around a hook. In past years high water and cold weather have been a drawback to wet fly fishing. In fact, we have been on fairly good sized northern trout streams on May 1 when you couldn't find the stream because high water had pushed it over its banks into the timber.

A Few Good Spots.

This May the Wolf river east of Antigo, the Lily, Prairie, Oconto, Peshtigo, Brule, Presque Isle, Black, and other noted haunts of the brook trout should do a rushing business in view of stream conditions.

BENTON WINS, 4-2.

Benton, Ill., April 26.—[Special.]—The Benton Coca Colas defeated the Buckners here today, 4 to 2. George kept the six hits of the visitors well scattered. Score:

HORNSBY CLIMBS INTO RANKS OF BIG SIX BATTERS

While most of the major league slugging leaders saw their averages stand still for the day, the result of a general rain that washed away two games in each league, a couple of the boys got in some good licks to climb higher in the select circle.

Dale Alexander, young Detroit star, hit two out of four against Chicago to boost his average to .463 and strengthen his hold on second place in the American league. He was topped in his circuit only by Al Van Camp, Red Sox outfielder, who remained idle with .474.

A new face popped up among the National league leaders when Rogers Hornsby, pilot of the Chicago Cubs, hit three times in five attempts against Cincinnati and jumped his average up to .425. Virgil Davis, Phillies catcher, retained his leadership with .478, and Wally Berger of the Braves was second with .463. The leaders in each league:

RESERVATIONS ON COUNTY COURSE GOLF OPEN TODAY

Advance golf reservations for the four courses of the forest preserves will be obtainable beginning today at 167 County building, according to Emmett F. Whealan, president of the forest preserve district. The courses are Northwestern on the north side, Palos Park on the south side, and Edgebrook No. 1 and No. 2 on the west side.

All courses are reported to be in splendid condition and are attracting several hundred golfers daily. Owing to the cold weather attendance last week wasn't as brisk as during the opening week, when 7,603 played over the four courses, but it was in excess of 5,000. With advance reservations in effect the total is expected to be materially increased during the remainder of the season.

Northwestern is being improved with the erection of a model golf house, constructed of hewn timber, logs and native stone. It is expected that it will be completed and opened to the public by May 15.

Mat War Goes to Commission Office Today

The Illinois athletic commission will have a visitor at its offices today in the person of Ed [Strangler] Lewis, the champion of the Sandow dynasty in wrestling. Lewis is expected to be accompanied by Billy Sandow, his manager, and Lou Daro, California promoter.

The purpose of the Lewis delegation in visiting the commission is to give the reigning house of Curley and its champion, James Londos, an official slap in the face in order to bring about a match between Lewis and Londos and thus produce one wrestling champion where two grunted before.

Offers Londos $25,000.

Daro's mission will be to present a certified check for $25,000 which Londos may have by signing for a title match with Lewis in California, Chicago, or anywhere else and going through with it.

Lewis will make his first appearance in these parts in some time tomorrow night, when he grapples with Jean Le Deaux, a sizable Frenchman, in the windup of the wrestling show to be presented by Promoters Joe Coffey and Jim Mullen at the Coliseum.

Lewis' victory over Don George, in which he regained the title he had lost to Gus Sonnenberg has done much to clear up the wrestling situation, which now seems to have narrowed itself down to two champions—Lewis and Londos.

Sonnenberg on Card.

Sonnenberg also will be on tomorrow night's program, meeting Karl Zbyszko, nephew of the illustrious Wladek and Stanislaus. Hank Bruder, former Northwestern football captain, will clash with George Schwab in one of the preliminaries.

Generous Sox Give Detroit 8 to 4 Victory

Two runs with which the Sox climbed back on even terms in their first attack also were produced at bargain prices. Blue opened with a single to the right of Gehringer. Passes to Simons and Reynolds brought about a full house. Eichrodt grounded into a forceout on which Blue slipped over the plate. Eichrodt was forced by Cissell, and Simons scored on the play. Cissell then stole second and third as a means of keeping warm and Appling walked, but both died when Kamm hoisted a foul to Baldy Schang.

Further difficulties arose for Frasier in the second and the Tigers moved into a one run lead. This happened because of a pass to Schang followed by singles off the bats of Johnson and Gehringer. Frasier got himself into a mess even more complicated in the third, but managed to escape. Stone tripled with one out and Owen and Schang walked. Frasier snuffed out this budding rally by nailing Sorrell on a popup and H. Walker on a grounder to Cissell.

The Sox couldn't avoid scoring two runs in their portion of the third. This shoved them ahead by 4 to 3, but the lead proved fleeting. The two run splurge began with a hit by Simons, after which Reynolds walked. Sorrell squared off long enough to get both Eichrodt and Cissell on pop fouls to Schang, but then lost control and walked Appling and Kamm. This forced Simons to score. Sorrell started to walk Henline, but was yanked in favor of Sullivan. The latter completed the pass, thus enabling Reynolds to go home. It took a whale of a stop by Alexander on Frasier's grounder to end the chapter.

Cissell Helps Tigers.

The tally that permitted the Tigers to bring about a 4 to 4 tie in the fourth was Cissell's second gift of the day. He didn't come up with a roller by Johnson, who led off. Johnson went to second on an infield out and home when Alexander hit a single into center.

During the fifth and sixth Frasier prospered, but with the start of the seventh Stone delivered the hit that did all the damage. Frasier made one throw, which wasn't quite close enough to the plate. He tried to improve on it the next time and Stone mistook it for a practice pitch. He whacked it on a line into the lower floor of the right field stand. Owen then scratched a hit to short and jogged to second on Schang's sacrifice. Sullivan's infield out moved him to third, whence he scored on Harvey Walker's two bagger past Blue, making the count 6 to 4.

The plot to erase Frasier from the picture started when Alexander doubled with one out in the eighth. Both McManus and Stone walked and Manager Bush regarded this as positive evidence that his speed balling Texan needed help. Faber stepped in and Owen crashed through with a single, Alex and McManus scoring. Schang filed out and more trouble arose when Sullivan got to base on Henline's error on a third strike. Faber himself threw out H. Walker to close the round.

Cubs Set Fast Pace for Week; Capture Three Out of Four

New York, April 26.—(AP)—The Chicago Cubs set the hottest pace in either major league for the last week, winning three of their four engagements.

They scored 24 runs to their opponents' 13 and committed only two errors in the week ending yesterday. Manager Rogers Hornsby was credited with the outstanding individual feat of the week when he hit three home runs against Pittsburgh on Friday.

Cardinals Come Next.

The champion Cardinals had the second best National league mark for the week, with two triumphs in three starts. However, they scored only seven runs to their opponents' eight. Philadelphia, winning three out of five, and Boston's Braves, winning four out of seven, had the next best records. The Pittsburgh Pirates set a low mark for the seven days when they managed to win only once in four starts. Brooklyn's Robins had the most errors, 10.

Four American league clubs ran a dead heat for the week, each winning four and losing two. They were the champion Philadelphia Athletics, New York Yankees, Cleveland Indians, and Detroit Tigers. By winning their last two starts against the Senators, the Athletics squared accounts with the team that chased them to the finish line last season, each with three victories up to now.

Sox Break Even.

Chicago's White Sox broke even for the period, winning two and losing a like number. The St. Louis Browns, who were going so bravely the previous week, hit tough going and dropped four stright.

The Yankees led the American league scoring parade for the week with 37 runs, Cleveland made the most errors, 10, and Boston's pitchers permitted the most runs, 41.

Last week's record for major league clubs, including games won and lost, runs, hits, errors, opponents' runs, and home runs, follow:

Barcelona and Berlin Lead in Olympic Vote

BARCELONA, Spain, April 26.—(AP)—A secret session of the delegates of the general Olympic committee was held today to vote on the site for the 1936 Olympic games. The results of the ballot among the delegates of the 20 countries represented were not announced, since no definite decision was reached.

A telegraphic poll will be made of the various nations which are not represented here and the results will be made known at Lausanne ten days from now.

Although there was no official announcement, it was believed Berlin and Barcelona stand the best chances of getting the 1936 Olympics.

The general sessions of the Olympic committee ended today. Charles H. Sherrill, American delegate, left immediately for Paris. The second American representative, William Garland of Los Angeles, plans to visit several European countries, including Greece, home of the original Olympic games, before he returns home.

"Everybody is enthusiastic about the next Olympic games at Los Angeles. We expect 32 nations to enter the contests. From the angle of the United States, the meeting here at Barcelona has been a big success, our 1932 program receiving even greater support than we expected."

Landmann Retires from German Davis Cup Team

BERLIN, April 26.—(AP)—Pleading pressing business engagements, Dr. Heins Landmann, German tennis star, informed the German tennis committee that he will not be able to play in the Davis cup matches against South Africa starting May 1. Landmann's defection is considered a serious blow to Germany's hopes of getting through the first round of the European zone competition.

single. Wilson ended the threat by hitting into a double play. Stephenson, Hartnett and Bell were easy outs in the second inning, but in the third, Root scored before Hack could come along with his damper. Grimm walked, but was forced by Root. Root went to second while Stripp was throwing out Cuyler. English singled to center, scoring Root, and went to third when Hornsby hit another single. Hack then lined to Cuccinello to end the inning.

Reds Score in Fifth.

The Reds broke through for a run in the fifth and made a valiant effort to get a peck of scores. Roettger doubled with one out. Roush batted for Durocher and singled to center, scoring Roettger. Dressen ran for Roush. Sukeforth walked and Lucas, batting for Frey, flied to Stephenson. Crabtree forced Sukeforth, Hornsby to English.

The Cubs faded out after getting a swell start on Johnson in the sixth. Wilson singled to center and Stephenson walked. Hartnett singled to left, Wilson scoring and Stephenson stopping at second. Stephenson went to third on Bell's fly, then Gabby stole second. Grimm and Root fanned.

Three hits weren't enough to produce a run for the Cubs in the eighth. Stephenson singled and went down with Hartnett in the Reds' fourth double play. Bell singled to left and went to third on Grimm's single. Root flied to Crabtree.

Northwestern university's baseball team faces another busy week, two games being scheduled, one with Notre Dame on Wednesday and another with Ohio State on Saturday. Both will be played at Roycemore field in Evanston.

The Notre Dame game originally was scheduled for South Bend, but a second game between the two schools will be played there May 19.

After a slow start Northwestern has quickened its pace and with three victories to its credit assumes a threatening position in the conference race. The Wildcats dropped their opening Big Ten game to Illinois but since that encounter they have defeated Iowa, won a pair from Minnesota and tied one with Indiana.

Coach Stewart plans to start his sophomore ace, Johnny Kruft, against the Irish Wednesday. Buck Fyfe, who hurled a two-hit game against Minnesota Saturday will be held in reserve.

With Capt. Larry Oliphant and Lee Hanley both hitting well above .300, the Wildcats have taken on a stronger offensive appearance in recent games. The hitting of these two men played a big part in Northwestern's double victory over Minnesota Friday and Saturday.

BEAR INFLUENCE HOLDS CONTROL OF GRAIN MARTS

BY CHARLES MICHAELS.

Liquidation and a drop in prices to the lowest level in years featured the grain markets the past week, the close being at practically the bottom, with a more bearish feeling than has been in evidence since the weakness early last November when the farm board found it necessary to step in and support the market and peg May wheat at 81 cents.

The bearishness in grains was increased by the decline in the security markets and by indifference on the part of European buyers to take advantage of the lowest prices in years to secure supplies. Despite the fact that grain prices are the lowest in years, they mean practically nothing to many leading traders who weigh the speculative situation in grains and securities the world over, and do not look for any permanent upturn in the immediate future. However, the feeling is always the most bearish when values are around the bottom, but at present the belief exists that conditions are different from any experienced in recent years.

Extent of Decline.

New crop wheat futures closed the week at 5⅛@5½c lower, with May old crop 1¼c lower; corn 2¾@3c lower, oats 2¼@4¾c, and rye 4¾@5c lower than a week ago in Chicago. Wheat in Winnipeg lost 5¾@6c, and in Liverpool 2⅜@2⅝c compared with the previous week.

Export business has fallen off due to a scare story put out by some members of the press early in the week that the farm board would sell all its 200,000,000 bu of wheat abroad by July 1 which is considered by the trade here as impossible. The decline in prices in the last few days has not restored the confidence of European buyers, neither has the failure of the New South Wales bank, one of the largest in that section. The fact that wheat is a bearish period generally, tends to offset the influence of lower prices which in past years have induced speculators to come into the market, but present conditions are so different that everyone is timid and are playing a slow watching every move that the market makes.

Crop Conditions Favorable.

Crop conditions are most favorable for winter wheat, and we are within less than two months of harvest. There have been years, however, when the winter wheat crop was seriously damaged between May 1 and harvest. Spring wheat is all about seeded in the American and Canadian northwest, and an absence of subsoil moisture is looked upon as likely to be an important factor later in the season. But with the belief that the United States will have around 650,000,000 bu or more of winter wheat there can be a shortage of spring wheat and still have more than is needed for export and domestic consumption, as the carryover, combined with the new crop, will leave an excessive supply, since European, southern hemisphere, and Russian crops are greatly reduced.

May delivery comes on Friday, but

International Trade of U.S. Bulks Bigger

New York, April 26.—[Special]—"The international trade of the United States is at present a greater proportionate factor in our general business than ever before," says O. K. Davis, secretary of the National Foreign Trade Council, in a statement today announcing the program of the eighteenth National Foreign Trade Convention to be held in New York on May 27, 28 and 29 next.

Mr. Davis points out that while the volume of our exports has fallen off by only about 15 per cent since the beginning of 1930, our total manufactured production has diminished in that period by more than 25 per cent, with the result that the proportion of our sales abroad is now close to 12 per cent of our production, compared with the average of about 8 per cent for the three years previous.

Distracted by Boom Year.

"We are in fact buying and selling larger quantities of many of the principal staples of trade in the markets of the world, in spite of the depression, than we averaged for the past three years," Mr. Davis continues, "but the statisticians haven't noticed it because they have had their eyes glued only on comparisons with the phenomenal year 1929. As a matter of fact, the volume of our exports of finished manufactures last year was less than 5 per cent lower, including automotive products, than the average volume of our exports of this class of our products most responsive to merchandising between 1927 and 1929. Likewise, we bought in 1930 a larger quantity of rubber, wood pulp, copper, coffee, newsprint paper and other of our basic imports than our past three-year average for such importations.

Near Average Volume.

"The actual volume of our trade with Europe, our largest customer and last year our biggest source of supply as well, is within 95 per cent of the average volume of our trade with Europe between 1927 and 1929.

"The goods are moving," concludes Mr. Davis, "the prices are low, and the demand in both directions is a thoroughly dependable stabilizer of American business at home. American foreign traders are doing their part in providing a business backlog that keeps the fires of our progress kindled."

Grand Trunk Speeds Up Chicago-Montreal Trains

Speeding up of train service between Chicago and two other cities was announced yesterday. The Grand Trunk Canadian National railways announced that 1 hour and 15 minutes would be cut from the running time of the International Limited between Chicago and Montreal. Leaving here at 7:15 a. m., the train will arrive in Montreal at 4 o'clock eastern time the following afternoon, making the trip in 19 hours and 40 minutes. On the Montreal-Chicago run the time will be cut to 17 hours and 55 minutes.

The Milwaukee road announced that 30 minutes will be sliced from the running time of the Day Express and the Pioneer between Chicago and Minneapolis and St. Paul. The latter change will necessitate a slight readjustment in the suburban schedule of the Milwaukee road.

GENERAL LEVEL OF EMPLOYMENT REGISTERS GAIN

BY O. A. MATHER.

For the first time in 17 months the general level of employment in the middle west rose definitely last month. At the same time, earnings advanced even relatively more than employment.

The monthly review of the Chicago Federal Reserve bank shows that employment in ten industrial lines improved nine-tenths of 1 per cent and earnings gained 4 per cent between Feb. 15 and March 15. On the other hand, employment in four nonmanufacturing groups receded one-tenth of 1 per cent and wages declined 1½ per cent. But for the 14 groups, as a whole, employment improved seven-tenths of 1 per cent and earnings gained 2.8 per cent.

March Improvement.

"Further improvement occurred during March in employment and earnings of reporting manufacturing establishments in this district," the review says. "The gain in the total for ten groups was about the same as that shown in February and sufficient to offset slight declines in the nonmanufacturing total, giving rise to the first gain in aggregate employment of all groups since September, 1929. Seven manufacturing groups and construction work contributed to the aggregate gain.

"Construction work, which has contributed heavily to the falling-off in nonmanufacturing aggregates, recovered moderately after having declined continuously for seven months in both number of men and pay rolls. Improvement in the farm labor situation was registered on April 1 in comparison with Jan. 1."

Monthly bank reviews are mildly optimistic. Current developments offer further support for the view that the low point of the cycle of business activity has been approximately reached, but fail to show any immediate prospect of marked recovery, according to the Guaranty Trust company, New York.

More Men at Work.

"The usual spring peak has come and gone without bringing any definite signs of significant improvement," the review continues. "Expansion in most industries last month was of no more than seasonal magnitude. Reports so far available for April indicate that the customary spring recession is under way but that it is proceeding in an orderly manner quite different from the precipitate retrenchment that was witnessed in the latter part of 1930."

"Were it possible to take business back to the general level of four months ago," the Central Trust Company of Illinois says, "it would be easier for us to realize the change for the better which has come about during that period of 17 weeks.

"With an unemployment situation which is still serious, most business men find it difficult to realize that more than one million workers who were not on the pay roll four months ago are now at work on full or part time, drawing wages and salaries at the rate of well over a billion dollars a year."

GIVES OPINION AS TO LIABILITY ON LAND BANK BONDS

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

New York, April 26.—In response to queries from holders of federal land bank bonds regarding the exact terms of liability of the banks, the managers of the syndicate which underwrites all of the issues, viz., Alex. Brown & Sons, the National City company, Harris Trust and Savings bank, Lee, Higginson & Co., The Guaranty Company of New York, and Brown Brothers, Harriman & Co., have obtained a legal opinion covering the point from Messrs. Hughes, Schurman & Dwight.

The opinion points out that congress provided in the act that each farm loan bond issued by any federal land bank "shall contain in the face thereof a certificate signed by the farm loan commissioner to the effect that all federal land banks are liable for the payment of each bond."

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

New York, April 26.—The pamphlet report of the Texas and Pacific Railway company for 1930 shows as of Dec. 31 that year total assets of $208,051,401, against $207,447,951 at the end of 1929. Current assets amounted to $8,665,172 and current liabilities $6,424,601, compared with $18,114,692 and $5,194,601, respectively, at the close of the preceding year. Cash decreased from $8,556,063 at end of 1929 to $1,078,691 on Dec. 31, 1930. Investments in road and equipment increased $7,669,081 to $187,712,064, while investments in affiliated companies gained $2,489,221 to $9,642,026.

The net income for 1930 was $5,652,191 after charges and taxes, the same as previously reported. This is equal after preferred dividends to $6.37 on the 387,551 common shares. This compares with $6,130,074, or $12.76 on the common shares in 1929. Railway operating revenues totaled $37,542,301, of which $30,286,654 represented revenues from freight and $4,415,831 passenger revenues. Operating revenues in 1929 aggregated $45,696,434.

During the year the company completed two new lines into newly discovered oil territory. A line extending from the Texas-New Mexico boundary to Lovington, New Mexico, a distance of 71.3 miles, was completed on July 20, 1930. Another extension of 11.68 miles from a connection with its main line to the new oil pool at Van, Tex., was completed on July 10, 1930.

Bankers Given Control of Eaton Investment Trust

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

New York, April 26.—Cyrus S. Eaton, the Nova Scotian who rose from a student for the ministry to be one of America's most spectacular financial figures, has resigned as chairman and director of Continental Shares, Inc., the powerful organization created by himself and associates as a holding company for his enterprises.

CYRUS S. EATON.

Mr. Eaton and three of his close associates, including W. H. Burwell, president of Continental Shares, have been supplanted by an entire new board of directors representing the four largest banks in Cleveland.

Under the new setup, George T. Bishop succeeds Mr. Burwell as president. Mr. Bishop, although until recently retired from active industry, has had a business experience of forty years with railroads, public utilities and manufacturing.

Follows Reports of Losses.

Announcement of the resignations of Mr. Eaton and his associates, made simultaneously tonight in Cleveland and New York, followed reports that Mr. Eaton had suffered severe financial losses as a result of the collapse in stock market values, affecting the shares of numerous companies in which he is interested.

In the last week shares of Continental were under severe selling pressure, reaching new lows in the history of the company. At the same time securities of other of the Eaton companies were the target either of liquidation or selling by shorts in expectation of some announcement.

This, it was believed, led to the decision of banking interests concerned in Continental affairs to accept the offer made previously by the Eaton interests to assume direction of the company. The announcement emphasizes that Continental Shares, in itself, is in a sound condition.

In Good Position.

"Even at the lowest quotations on the New York stock exchange as to Continental's holdings listed there, and our judgment as to holdings not so listed, Continental has more than 100 per cent equity over all its payable obligations and liabilities."

In addition to Mr. Eaton and Mr. Burwell, chairman and president, respectively, of Continental Shares, M. J. Mandelbaum and Philip Wick, of Wick & Co., resigned from the directorate.

The new directors are W. M. Baldwin, president of the Union Trust company; Harris Creech, president of the Cleveland Trust company; J. Arthur House, president of the Guardian Trust company, and C. E. Sullivan, chairman of the board of the Central United National bank. These four new directors, together with George T. Bishop, J. A. Hadden, and H. B. Stewart, who were elected to the board a few months ago, now constitute the entire board of directors of Continental Shares.

Statement Continues.

Stating that a complete review of Continental's balance sheet had been made by the new officers and directors, disclosing equity of more than 100 per cent over obligations of whatever sort, Mr. Bishop continued:

"In my opinion there is absolutely no reason for Continental shareholders to be apprehensive as to the entire solvency of the corporation and the ultimate substantial enhancement of their investment, provided, of course, the financial storm ever stops. I have been through a number of financial storms and, heretofore, they have always stopped, and I am still confident that is what is going to happen this time."

Continental Shares, organized by Eaton-Otis interests of Cleveland and New York, about five years ago, reported assets of $156,499,787 at the end of 1930. Investments aggregating $144,752,349 were, however, shown at cost which was $30,705,431 above market value on that date. Unique in the field of investment trusts, its policy has been the concentration of its investments in a few basic industries, chiefly utilities, steels, and rubbers, including Ohio steel companies.

Takes Brokerage Business.

Coincident with Eaton's action it wa sannounced that the stock exchange transactions of Otis & Co. hereafter would be handled through E. A. Pierce & Co. The announcement was made in the following statement:

"Otis & Co., having decided to segregate their investments from their commission business, have entered into an arrangement whereby their stock exchange transactions will be handled through E. A. Pierce & Co., the accounts of the related customers to be carried directly by E. A. Pierce & Co.

"Otis & Co. will continue as members of the New York and other stock exchanges and maintain, generally speaking, all their present offices, acting insofar as commission transactions are concerned, as representatives of E. A. Pierce & Co.

"This status will enable clients of such offices to have uninterrupted contact with Otis & Co.'s personnel with whom they have hitherto dealt."

RESERVE ACTION STARTS FLOW OF GOLD TO LONDON

Pynchon Crash Fails to Stir Market.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

New York, April 26.—Apart from the suspension of an important stock exchange house, the incidents which attracted most attention in the financial community last week were the engagement of the first large shipments of gold from France to this market since the stabilization of the franc and the prompt action of the federal reserve bank to deflect further French gold exports away from New York and toward London.

Under other circumstances the suspension of so large a house as Pynchon & Co. might have been expected to unsettle the stock market seriously. That the immediate effects of the announcement brought only minor recessions even in the shares closely connected with the name of the suspended house gave an indication of how little part the general public is now playing in the day to day trading in stocks. Professionals who have been selling stocks naturally utilized the bad news as an opportunity to cover.

The incident hight have been more disturbing had not the knowledge of this firm's difficulties late last year been so widely spread. As it was the completion of the first rush of short covering left the market without other support and the closing session of the week was marked by a general decline in prices.

Starts Flow of Funds.

The episode of the French gold movement served to illustrate a nice point in central banking technique. The reduction of the bill buying rate of the federal reserve bank for short term paper by one-eighth of 1 per cent was on the surface a comparatively minor adjustment. It was sufficient, however, to forge a general reduction in open market bill rates and to precipitate an immediate flow of funds out of this market and toward London.

Despite the protests of discount houses in London the bank of England has maintained a "pegged" rate for the weekly treasury tenders and has intimated its intention, according

Number 2 in a series of advertisements "What Are The Facts?"

Leading the Downward Trend in prices

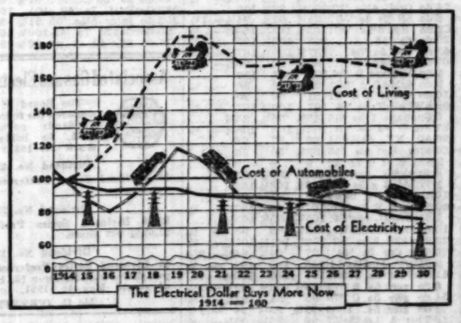
THE present downward trend in prices is led by two items—electricity and automobiles. Electricity that cost $1 in 1914 costs only 73 cents now. Automobile values costing $1 then, are 79 cents now. In contrast, general living expenses have gone up since 1914, so that food, clothing, amusements and other items that cost $1 then are $1.55 now.

The automobile industry is one of the most highly competitive of America's great industries. Employing 1 in 10 of the country's workers . . . it sells 4,000,000 passenger cars a year. Electricity's feat in reducing prices even more drastically than the automobile is, therefore, the more commendable.

More Light for Less Money

In addition to being cheaper, electric service offers more to the customer than before the War. Service is more adequate and reliable. Appliances are improved. Lamps, for instance, are 65% more efficient than in 1914 . . . burning longer and brighter.

The electric industry is still in its period of vigorous growth . . . capable of doubling its capital investment each decade . . . inventing each year hundreds of new appliances for home use . . . pushing electrification of farms and factories, houses and highways.



One in 13 of New Customers

Of the 554,789 new customers added by the electric light and power industry in the U. S. in 1930, one in 13 is an Associated System customer. This growth is at a faster rate than for the industry as a whole.

Customers of the Associated System realize the unusual value of electric service. Encouraged by new rates that make possible full use of electricity at moderate cost, they invested $7,354,058 in refrigerators, hot water heaters, ranges and other load-building appliances last year, compared to $5,910,048 in 1929.

The strong position of the Associated as a growing System in a promising industry has attracted 223,348 investors in Associated securities. Associated securities can be purchased now at prices to yield from 5% to 6½%.

It is not expected that the farm board will have to take more than 1,000,000 to 1,500,000 bu of cash wheat in public bounes, as it owns all the stock except that quantity. It also controls a good part of the contract stocks in private elevators here, and expects to take some wheat in track deliveries. Of late, however, its operations in northwestern and northwestern markets will prevent large shipments from these quarters, as prices there have been bid up to above a safe shipping difference to Chicago.

Open Interest Reduced.

Open interest in wheat has been materially cut down, there being 61,451,000 bu in May at the close on Friday, against 68,910,000 bu a week ago. Reductions were also made to the open interest in May corn, oats, and rye.

At the close May wheat was 81¼@ 81¾c, July and September 59⅞@60c, December 63¼@63⅝c. Prices for the week follow:

Liquidation in May Corn.

Holders liquidated May corn freely throughout the week, forcing it down 3¾@55¾c, with the close at that level, going to a discount of 2½c under the July, which closed at 58½@58¼c, September 58¾@58¼c, December, new crop 51⅝@51¾c. Cash corn on Saturday broke 1@3c. Shipping business was only fair. Delivories of cash corn on May contracts are not feared by the trade.

Corn planting is on over a large area of leading states and the country movement is only fair. Prices for the week follow:

United Light and Railways.

What is your opinion of the preferred stock of United Light and Railways company?—C. L. S.

United Light and Railways company (Delaware) was organized in 1920 as a financing and holding corporation. It is directly controlled by United Light and Power company through ownership of all its common stock.

Controlled companies furnish electric light and power to Kansas City, Mo.; Columbus, O.; San Antonio, Tex., and adjacent territories; street railway service in Columbus, O.; Lincoln, Neb., and San Antonio and gas to Detroit and Milwaukee.

Net income showed a steady upward trend from 1926 to 1929. For the twelve months ended Nov. 30, 1930, net income, before giving effect to payment of $26,872,970 debenture 5½s of United American company and $4,996,800 debt to United Light and Power company through issuance of 600,000 common shares at par, was $2,843,477, or $44.59 per prior preferred share. For 1929 net income was $7,982,773, against $3,966,902 for 1928 and $4,462,-971 in 1927.

The prior preferred stock (all series) is preferred as to assets and as to cumulative dividends of $7, $6.36, and $6 per share per year, according to the series. All series are redeemable at $105 per share.

Dividends on the prior preferred have been paid regularly since issuance. This stock deserves a fairly good rating.

Glidden Company.

Will you kindly give me a report on the Glidden company of Cleveland, O?—T. W. G.

Glidden company, one of the leading factors in the production of paint, has in recent years diversified its product by the purchase of food enterprises.

An increase in operating expenses and a decrease in sales over the preceding year resulted in net profit of $1,246 for the twelve months ended Oct. 31, 1930. Deficit for the year after dividends was $1,779,236. For the fiscal year ended Oct. 31, 1929, net income was $3,969,110, or $3.57 per common share. President Joyce stated that inventory adjustments, due to declining commodity prices, had affected net income in the latter half of the fiscal year.

On Oct. 31, 1930, current assets were $8,671,615 and current liabilities were $1,239,564. This left a net working capital of $13,046,362, against $9,790,-051 the year before. Capitalization consisted of $6,285,600 funded debt, 100,000 shares of $7 prior preferred stock for $7,000, and 695,226 no par common shares.

No dividend has been paid on the common since Oct. 1, 1930. The preferred and common are speculative.

CREDIT MEN HOPE FOR TRADE GAINS IN 3D QUARTER

Bigger Demand Noted for Industrial Loans.

In an effort to locate the corner just around which business improvement is lurking, the Chicago Association of Credit Men has conducted a survey among the various credit groups in the organization. The survey reveals that the men whose business it is to appraise the credit of retailers dealing in the Chicago trading area believe that the corner will be turned during the third quarter of the year, if not sooner.

The banking group, including both the loop and outlying banks, is practically unanimous in the belief that business will show a decided improvement by fall. Several of the banks reported an increasing demand for loans for industrial purposes as indicative of an increasing confidence on the part of business generally. The majority of the banks report that deposits and savings accounts were larger during the first quarter of 1931 than during the corresponding period of 1930.

Larger Dollar Volume.

Thirty five per cent of the firms dealing in foodstuffs reported that not only a larger dollar volume but a larger merchandise volume of business had been done during the first quarter of 1930 than in the first quarter of 1930.

Furniture — Improving. March showed good advance. Volume first quarter of 1931 equal to first quarter of 1929, though less than first quarter of 1930. Business suffering somewhat from bankruptcy sales.

Drugs Do Better.

Drugs and chemicals—Did larger volume of business first quarter of 1931 than in corresponding period of 1930. Stocks are low and orders are greater.
